MOVING TO FIRMER GROUND

Roughly 200 Letpadaung households stranded by the roadside as Chindwin bursts

AROUND 200 households in the vicinity of Letpadaung Mountain, situated in Sagaing Region's Salingyi Township, was evacuated on Monday to the verge on the Salingyi – Nyaungpingyi roadside as their houses were flooded after the Chindwin River burst its banks.

The Salingyi — Nyaungpingyi road is 18 feet wide and only accommodates a one way flow of traffic. The villagers have erected their shelters on a patch of land beside the road which measures four feet higher than their flooded village.

“Those from our village are having to relocate as water is flooding into our homes. Come the afternoon and we'll have to move to the side of the road too. In the past, it used to take between a week to ten days after the Chindwin had burst its banks for the water to start entering into our village. But, the blocking up of the waterway towards the Letpadaung Mountain by the Chinese Winbao Company has seen the waters of the Chindwin flood our village as soon as the river has overflowed.” said U Myint Htay, a resident of Tonetawkyang village.

The waters of the Chindwin surpassed the dangerous 1,000cm level on Sunday, with water levels slowly creeping up ever since, reaching 1,016 on Tuesday, according to the Department of Meteorology and Hydrology.

“The water has risen by about three feet. Families have left a person or two behind [to guard the remainder of their household possessions] while the rest relocate to dryer ground with their livestock and household animals. For the time being, we still haven't received any assistance from any government departments concerned.

There aren't yet any issues with drinking water and people are cooking and eating as they need to.” said U Win Myint Oo, administrator of Letpadaung village tract.

Residents of Shwehla village have been relocating to the side of the Salingyi – Nyaungpingyi road over the last four days, taking with them their livestock of cattle, horses, sheep and swine. The numbers of displaced households beside the road is reportedly in the region of 200 while the local middle school has also been temporarily closed.

It is reported that water from the Chindwin is also beginning to flood into the Letpadaung Mountain region villages of Tonetawkyang, Alaytaw, Ywarthit and Alayywar.

But the verge along the roadside will prove familiar for most as flooding of the Chindwin last year saw families from the region forced to seek refuge beside the road for nearly three weeks.—

Labourers sentenced to 1 month jail or a K5,000 fine for contempt of court

Thein Ko Lwin

FIFTEEN detained labour demonstrators received a sentence of one-month imprisonment or a K5,000 fine for contempt of court from a Nay Pyi Taw Tatkon Township court yesterday.

The group was detained in the township in May for trying to pass barricades blocking them from entering Nay Pyi Taw.

The workers, from a finished wood products factory in Sagaing, are currently facing charges under articles 143, 147 and 505 (a) for unlawful assembly, disobeying the instruction of the police and disturbing public order.

After hearing the sentence at the fourth hearing the workers voiced the disappointment at the decision of the court, saying they don't have faith in the judiciary.

“We will go on hunger strike to protest against the court and the government”, said Ko Khaing

Min, the leader of the protestors.

The next court hearing for other charges will be on 27 July.

Out of 51 labour protestors that were detained after their protest were dispersed by police in mid-May, 35 returned home on 30 May after they were found not guilty.

Ma Ba Tha rails against Yangon Region Chief Minister while urging calm

THE Central Committee for the Protection of Race and Religion, whose local acronym is Ma Ba Tha, has released an announcement on 12 July in which it urged its subcommittees nationwide to focus on 'peaceful missionary work' rather than mobilising mass rallies in response to recent political setbacks.

Ma Ba Tha is known nationally and internationally as a provocative and outspoken Buddhist ultra-nationalist organisation that promotes ideals of racial and religious purity.

The announcement was directed to deter possible protests against Yangon Region Chief Minister U Phyo Min Thein's comments on Ma Ba Tha in Singapore and in Yangon. The chief minister remarked that the committee was 'unnecessary'.

Following the chief minister's remarks the committee called an emergency meeting with leading monks and reached a decision to call the president and the State Counsellor to lodge complaints over the chief minister's words.

In a recent response to queries by the media in connection with what the chief minister said, Union Minister for Religious and Cultural Affairs Thura U Aung Ko refused to comment but said the chief minister exercised his democratic right to free expression.

Ma Ba Tha later appealed to its subcommittees to remain calm in its announcement after learning that U Phyo Min Thein's statement was a free expression of his personal opinion.—Myanmar News Agency

Exhibition aims to showcase Myanmar's natural world

THE natural environment of Myanmar including the life of birds will be featured at a photo exhibition scheduled to take place in Yangon this month.

The collective event will showcase between 23 and 24 July at Royal Rose (Taw Win Hnin Zi) Hall under the supervision of a local team of bird conservationists and natural environment enthusiasts. The event will feature the life of native birds, bird ecosystems and the challenges in conservation of birds and other wildlife.

Several educative talks about the life and challenges of rare birds, which are in danger of extinction, will be held during the two-day event. The major purpose of the exhibition is to raise awareness of the conservation of birds and the natural environment among audiences, one of event organisers said. Birds play a crucial role in balancing the ecosystem. Some species are facing extinction, said an executive member of the team.

The organiser invites enthusiastic photographers to showcase their own works. All works will be displayed for sale during the two-day event. According to a survey, Myanmar has more than 1,000 recorded bird species, seven of which are endemic birds, 114 bird species are globally threatened or near-threatened and 186 bird species are waterbirds.—YCDC

MYANMAR garment factories with Cutting-Making and Packing (CMP) systems plan to expand their markets to America, Canada and Russia, said an official from Myanmar Garments Entrepreneurs' Association. Myanmar's main markets currently are Japan, South Korea and the EU.

Myanmar is making a concerted effort to boost its export products focusing mainly on its garment and industrial sectors. Myanmar's garment industry operates on a CMP system, earning the sector US$1.6bn in the 2015-16 Financial Year.

About 1,500 garment factories are expected to be operating by 2025, creating an estimated one million jobs. Myanmar's garment industry is planning to turn to an FOB system where the garment factories produce and exported their own products.

Sculpture business needs aid

SCULPTURES are calling for aid to help save one of Myanmar's traditional arts and crafts, said U Zawgyi, an expert artisan, adding that the SMEs and artists have been neglected by authorities and donor organisations.

"The raw materials are scarce and expensive, and so, the scul-tors need the monetary assistance. If they are continued to be neglected, they will find it difficult to earn a living," said U Zawgyi.

The wood utilized in sculpture has become scarce and so the cost is high; some artists engaged in sculpturing are not doing well. Currently, the sales of sculptured toys have remarkably declined - the business is dependent only on the tourists.

"Assistance is required in order for the sculpture business not to fade away. The artisans are doing this business because of their love for the art of sculpture, continued U Zawgyi.—200

NTT Communications to offer broadband service in Yangon

JAPAN's NTT Communications Corp. announced Wednesday it has begun offering high-speed Internet connections for enterprises throughout Myanmar's commercial capital Yangon, after receiving a network service license from the government.

The company is offering the service, Digi-Path Premier, to provide reliable, high-speed Internet connections for enterprises throughout the Yangon area, the Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corp. subsidiary said in a statement.

The service offers dedicated circuits starting from bandwidth of 1Mbps, to connect enterprises with NTT Communications' global Internet network with options including global IP address, web hosting, mail hosting, rental routers, managed firewalls, Internet VPN and file transfers, it said.

It said its new service in Yangon would ensure highly reliable communication environment, prompt delivery, and around-the-clock network monitoring.

Meanwhile, Manabu Ka-

hara, president of NTT Communications (Thailand) Co., told reporters in Yangon that his company will start a small or medium-sized data center in Yangon in cooperation with a local partner in order to provide advanced IT services to its customers in Myanmar.

In Southeast Asia, NTT Communications is also providing Internet connections to enterprises on in Singapore, Malaysia, Indonesia, Thailand, Vietnam and Cambodia.

Since the beginning of Myanmar's transition from military to democratic rule in 2011, an increasing number of multinational enterprises are entering the country's market and creating demand for reliable high-quality Internet connection services.

NTT Communications opened its branch in Yangon in 2012.

According to earlier surveys, the number of Internet users in Myanmar, mainly through mobile phones, could reach more than 38 million, out of a total population of more than 51 million, by the end of this year.—Kyodo News

LDP to regain upper house majority for 1st time in 27 years

TOKYO — Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's Liberal Democratic Party is set to regain a majority of upper house seats for the first time in 27 years after an independent member submitted an application to join the party, LDP lawmakers said Wednesday.

Tatsuo Hirano, who has held a seat in the Iwate prefectural constituency since 2001 and was reconstruction minister in 2012 under the government led by the Democratic Party of Japan, told reporters, "Japan now needs continuity of policies. What the LDP is doing is not wrong. I want to contribute to Iwate and Japan as a lawmaker of the LDP."

LDP Secretary General Sadakazu Tanigaki asked Hirano to join the ruling party during talks on Tuesday.

Hirano's switch to the LDP could give Abe more power to push his "Abenomics" monetary policies and achieve his ultimate goal of revising Japan's 70-year-old Constitution for the first time. Along with other lawmakers supportive of revising the postwar Constitution, the LDP and its junior coalition partner Komeito won a two-thirds majority in Sunday's upper house election, but the LDP itself fell short of an overall majority by just one seat. Hirano, whose seat was not contested in the election, previously left the DPJ in April 2013 and became an independent.

Hirano's joining the LDP means that the pro-constitutional revision parties — the ruling bloc, Initiatives from Osaka and Party for the Japanese Kokoro — will have 162 of the 242 House of Councillors seats. In order to propose a constitutional amendment and call a national plebiscite on the matter, the support of two-thirds of both houses of the parliament is required. The ruling parties already hold such a majority in the House of Representatives, or lower house. —Kyodo News

Unemployed man charged with murdering Cambodian government critic

PHNOM PENH — A Cambodian court on Wednesday charged an unemployed man with murdering prominent government critic and activist Kem Ley, who was gunned down in broad daylight at a shop in the capital Phnom Penh.

Kem Ley's death comes amid rising political tensions between veteran Prime Minister Hun Sen and an opposition hoping to challenge his grip on power at local elections in 2017 and national elections in 2018.

The Phnom Penh city court charged Chuop Somlap, 38, with the premeditated murder of Kem Key, 46, the founder of grassroots advocacy group "Khmer for Khmer", deputy prosecutor Ly Sophana told reporters.

He was also charged with the illegal possession of a weapon and another unidentified person was charged with the illegal sale of a weapon to Chuop Somlap, Ly Sophana said.

Chuop Somlap was arrested shortly after the shooting on Sunday. In a police video he claims to have killed the popular political commentator over a $3,000 debt.

Members of Cambodia's opposition and activists have been jailed in recent months on charges they say were trumped up by the government as part of a crackdown to mute critics ahead of the elections.

Many of Kem Ley's supporters said the murder was political and were sceptical of the reason given for the killing.

Kem Ley's family said the activist did not owe money, adding that they now feared for their safety.

"If I continue to live in Cambodia, it's not safe," Kem Ley's wife Bou Rachana said.

While Chuop Somlap's wife said her husband was a poor, unemployed man and would not have had such a large amount of money to lend. "He has never had that much money," she said.

Kem Ley was a frequent critic of Hun Sen, whose more than 30 years grip on power has been challenged by the rise of the opposition Cambodia Nation Rescue Party (CNRP).

His most recent critique was a commentary on a report by anti-corruption pressure group Global Witness, which accused the prime minister and his family of having amassed $200 million in business interests.—Reuters

Philippines says open to talks with China on South China Sea ruling

MANILA — The Philippines is open to discussions with China on implementing the landmark decision by a UN-backed arbitral tribunal on the South China Sea dispute involving the two countries among others, Foreign Secretary Perfecto Yasay said Wednesday.

A day after the Permanent Court of Arbitration in The Hague issued its stunning ruling invalidating China's "nine-dash line" by which Beijing claims almost all of the South China Sea, Yasay told a radio interview that the Philippine government "will be formulating the succeeding steps in making sure that the decision...will be peacefully implemented."

"We are open to making sure that we will have bilateral talks with China in the implementation of this decision of the arbitral tribunal," Yasay said.

Aside from striking down China's claim to sovereignty over the resource-rich body of water that is also an important route of international trade, the five-member tribunal also found some features in the South China Sea being claimed by China as actually being within the exclusive economic zone of the Philippines.

The ruling also said China violated the Philippines' sovereign rights by interfering with Philippine fishing and petroleum exploration, construction of artificial islands, and destruction of marine environment.

In a statement issued Wednesday, former President Benigno Aquino, under whose term the arbitration case was filed, suggested that "instead of viewing this decision as a victory of one party over another, the best way to look at this judgment is that, it is a victory for all."

"I say this because the clarity rendered now establishes better conditions that enable countries to engage each other, bearing in mind their duties and rights within a context that espouses equality and amity," Aquino, who ended his six year-term on 30 June said.

"Without doubt, this long-running dispute is now closer to having a permanent solution," he added.

Acknowledging and thanking the efforts of the Aquino administration "in making sure that we get this kind of ruling by our arbitral tribunal," Yasay said the next step is to "move forward and let diplomacy reign."

"Now is the time for diplomacy to reign again, to make sure that our diplomatic options and initiatives will not be prevented or undermined, so that we can peacefully implement the decision of the arbitral tribunal," he said.

Yasay disclosed that even before the decision was issued, Manila and Beijing committed to each other not to take "provocative actions."

Asked on the particular impact of the decision on Filipino fishermen who were previously barred by China at the Scarborough Shoal, which lies just 124 nautical miles from the coast of Philippine main island of Luzon, Yasay said: "Now, I think, there is no basis for anyone to prevent fishermen from fishing, to continue fishing in these traditional fishing grounds."

Yasay, who is a lawyer by training, said that based on his understanding of the decision, Scarborough Shoal has been declared as "a common fishing ground of fishermen, including from the Philippines, Viet Nam and China."

"So, my understanding of this decision is, it's important for us to immediately have an agreement with countries concerned how to mutually benefit in so far as these fishing grounds are concerned," Yasay said.

Philippine Defence Secretary Delfin Lorenzana said there are plans for consultations with member countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations on what steps the Philippines should take in light of the ruling.

"The community of nations, the ASEAN, has supported us in our pleading," Lorenzana, a retired military official, said while highlighting that the landmark decision affects not just the Philippines but other claimant countries as well.—Kyodo News

China issues white paper on settling disputes with Philippines

BEIJING — The Chinese government on Wednesday issued a white paper titled “China Adheres to the Position of Settling Through Negotiation the Relevant Disputes Between China and the Philippines in the South China Sea.”

“The Philippines’ territorial claim over part of Nansha Qundao is groundless from the perspectives of either history or international law,” said the document issued by the State Council Information Office.

The core of the relevant disputes between China and the Philippines in the South China Sea lies in the territorial issues caused by the Philippines’ invasion and illegal occupation of some islands and reefs of China’s Nansha Qundao (the Nansha Islands), it said.

In addition, with the development of the international law of the sea, a maritime delimitation dispute also arose between the two states regarding certain sea areas of the South China Sea, it added.

The two countries held multiple rounds of consultations on the proper management of disputes at sea and reached consensus on resolving through negotiation and consultation the relevant disputes, which has been repeatedly reaffirmed in a number of bilateral documents, according to the white paper.

In 2013, the then government of the Republic of the Philippines unilaterally initiated the South China Sea arbitration.

By doing so, the Philippines has violated its standing agreement with China to settle the relevant disputes through bilateral negotiation, has violated China’s right to choose means of dispute settlement of its own will as a State Party to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS), and has abused the UNCLOS dispute settlement procedures, it said.

“The Arbitral Tribunal established at the Philippines’ unilateral request has no jurisdiction over relevant submissions, and awards rendered by it are null and void and have no binding force,” said the document.

“China’s territorial sovereignty and maritime rights and interests in the South China Sea shall under no circumstances be affected by those awards. China does not accept or recognise those awards. China opposes and will never accept any claim or action based on those awards,” it added.

The white paper, consisting of more than 20,000 Chinese characters, also explained that Nansha Zhudao (the South China Deputy head of the State Council Information Office Guo Weimin (L) speaks at a press conference on the white paper titled “China Adheres to the Position of Settling Through Negotiation the Relevant Disputes Between China and the Philippines in the South China Sea” in Beijing, capital of China, on 13 July, 2016. Sea Islands), are China’s inherent territory, saying the activities of the Chinese people in the South China Sea date back to over 2,000 years ago.

China is the first to have discovered, named, and explored and exploited Nansha Zhudao and relevant waters, and the first to have continuously, peacefully and effectively exercised sovereignty and jurisdiction over them.

“China’s sovereignty over Nansha Zhudao and relevant rights and interests in the South China Sea have been established in the long course of history, and are solidly grounded in history and law,” it said.

China abides by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and is committed to upholding and promoting international rule of law. It respects and acts in accordance with international law, the white paper said.

While firmly safeguarding its territorial sovereignty and maritime rights and interests, China adheres to the position of settling disputes through negotiation and consultation and managing differences through rules and mechanisms, it added.

“China endeavors to achieve win-win outcomes through mutually beneficial cooperation, and is committed to making the South China Sea a sea of peace, cooperation and friendship,” it said.

China is committed to maintaining peace and stability in the South China Sea with other countries in the region and upholding the freedom of navigation and overflight in the South China Sea enjoyed by other countries under international law, according to the white paper.

In the white paper, China urges countries outside this region to respect the efforts in this regard by countries in the region and to play a constructive role in maintaining peace and stability in the South China Sea. —Xinhua

South Korea announces site for US missile defence system

SEOUL — Seongju County in South Korea’s North Gyeong-sang Province has been chosen as the site for deployment of an advanced US antimissile defence system, South Korean Deputy Defence Minister Ryu Je Seung said Wednesday.

“Defence ministers (of South Korea and the US) approved

Seongju as the best site for the deployment, which maximizes military efficiency, guarantees safety for local residents, and also doesn’t cause health and environmental effects,” Ryu said in a prepared statement.

He said the decision on the site selection was made after a joint survey by South Korea and the United States on various candidate sites.

Seongju County is located in the country’s south central region, about 275 kilometres from the North Korean border.

The two countries on Friday last week announced the decision to place the Terminal High Altitude Area Defence (THAAD) system in the South to counter North Korea’s nuclear and missile threats.

THAAD is designed to intercept ballistic missiles flying at high altitudes inside and outside the atmosphere.

North Korea issued a strong warning against the deployment in a statement on Monday by the Artillery Bureau of the General Staff of the Korean People’s Army. It warned it will “take a physical counter-action to thoroughly control THAAD, aggression means of the US for world domination, from the moment its location and place have been confirmed in South Korea.”

China and Russia have also strongly opposed the deployment on grounds it could pose serious threats to their strategic security.—Kyodo News

India’s top court deals blow to Modi’s ambitions in northeast

NEW DELHI — India’s Supreme Court ruled on Wednesday that the government’s imposition of direct rule in a remote northeastern state was illegal, and the dislodged opposition Congress party should return to power immediately.

The government imposed so-called president’s rule in Arunachal Pradesh, a vast but sparsely populated state bordering China, in January after the Congress party that had been ruling there suffered splits which the government believed left it unable to govern.

The court’s order for the reinstatement of Congress rule in the state is a blow to Prime Minister Narendra Modi’s ambition of expanding the influence of his Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) in the underdeveloped northeast.

“This court quashes the imposition of president’s rule in Arunachal Pradesh,” a five-judge constitution bench said in its ruling, calling the Congress party’s dismissal “illegal and unconstitutional”.

Congress, whose power base has shrunk across India since the BJP won a landslide general election in 2014, also saw its rule reinstated in May in Uttarakhand, another state where president’s rule had been imposed as Modi’s party attempted to wrest control.

The BJP scored its first state election victory in the northeast in May when it won in Assam, the region’s most populous state, in a sign of its growing influence beyond its traditional heartland.

Congress is run by the fabled Gandhi dynasty that has led the world’s largest democracy for most of its existence but now rules only a handful of India’s 29 states, including in Arunachal Pradesh, home to 1.38 million people.—Reuters

Hub with care

Aung Myint Oo

HUB literally means centre of an activity or network. Functionally, it acts as a nerve centre providing something essential or coordinating the others in its network with regard to a particular area of interest e.g. finance, medicine, education, transport and information technology etc. A hub can be put into a geographical context such as global, regional or national depending on its level of significance and dominance.

Status to be a hub is usually associated with some or all of those attributes such as wealth, top-notch services, sound legal and regulatory landscape, good human resource management, customer friendliness and historical significance. Besides being a financial booster, as 'hub-status' also means prestige, understandably it is usually regarded as something worth striving for although not easy to attain and a lot more difficult to maintain.

Logically, who to be labelled as hub should mainly be the business and interest of its customers and peers. However, nowadays tradition of ranking the competitors by a third party such as a think-tank or consultancy agency sometimes can possibly turn the game into some form of commercialization or political play. One should also keep the fingers crossed and pray that 'media won't add the colours to it'. Otherwise, things can become misleading for the customers.

Although 'hub-status' generally serves as a reward to the holder, there is no guarantee that it is always on bright side. One of the potential downsides is possible conflict with the interest of its own community. A good example can be competition for limited healthcare resources between overseas patients seeking treatments and local patients. Therefore, carefully thought-out policies safeguarding the interest of its own population while maintaining reputation as a medical hub ought to be in place before enjoying the fruits of medical tourism industry.

The other potential risk of being a hub is 'unwanted hub-status'. To describe it, one should imagine a context where a society or a country with unique policy permissive to a particular service to fulfill its own local need may inadvertently open the floodgates for overseas patients who are unable to seek that particular service in their own country due to some reasons e.g. legal restrictions, unless there are preventive measures such as policy and legislative safeguards in place. Good examples for such services are abortion and surrogacy whereby a woman rents her womb to another woman to give birth on her behalf for medical or non-medical reasons and with or without a fee for her service. The irony of such scenario is that it will be very easy and spontaneous to become a hub without a usual hard fight.

Even though without involving the risks mentioned above and something really looks peaceful, universal and spiritual, it could still impose some level of risks to the society once it possesses a hub-status. Please take Myanmar as an example. As of now, despite huge potential of development in near future, Myanmar is not yet a hub in any of the sectors mentioned earlier. However, Myanmar has a unique status in the world as a hub of Theravada Buddhism. Neither like a medical hub with the issue of conflicts for limited resources, nor like a financial hub with huge risks of money laundering, but it has been experiencing its own unique risks of potential conflicts between different religions which is really detrimental to the society and could seriously hamper its development potentials.

To conclude, though it is not a concrete and easy way-out to the issues mentioned, status of hub should always be coupled with carefully thought-out policies, legislations and more importantly, with involvement of the government and the entire society to safeguard its own interest. Therefore, it is good to be a hub, but always with due care.

Monastic education schools and monastic institutions in the Republic of the Union of Myanmar

Ba Sein
(Religious Affairs)

MONASTIC education schools and monastic institutions have been existing in Myanmar during the periods of the successive Myanmar Kings since thousand years ago. As you know, Myanmar has been a Theravada Buddhist country since then. Over 90 percent of population of Myanmar believe in Buddhism and they all are Buddhists. There is no Myanmar king that does not carry out the purification, perpetuation and propagation of the Buddha Sasana throughout the country. The countless number of shrines and pagodas built and constructed by successive Myanmar Kings can be seen all over the country till now. There is at least a monastery in every village throughout the country. The Myanmar Buddhist children of ancient time have only to go to monastery at their village because there were no academic modern schools at that time. Most of Myanmar nationals of ancient time educated from the monasteries or the monastic education schools. There were many famous and learned monks and people who were well-educated from the monastic education schools all over the country. The British colonial imperialists invaded and occupied Myanmar after fighting three invading wars.

The British Colonial Government ruled the whole Myanmar for one hundred years and oppressed Myanmar nationals by divisive rule. On other-hand, they persuaded Myanmar nationals to be live in other religious leading to overwhelm the Buddhism, the primitive religion of Myanmar nationals. The monastic education schools and monastic institutions throughout Myanmar became weak and faint because they were not encouraged and supported by the British Colonial Government at all. However, some of farsighted and learned Myanmar Chief Monks (Maha Theras) and lay-devotees managed to continue keeping up the monastic education schools and the monastic institutions throughout the country. At present, there are altogether over fifty-one thousand monasteries and over fifteen thousand monastic education schools all over the Union of Myanmar. Over sixteen hundred thousand monks (members of the sangha) and twenty three hundred thousand novices (Sameneras) are dwelling at these monasteries and learning the Buddhist scriptures (The Pariyatti Education) which mainly lead to the purification, perpetuation and propagation of the Buddha Sasana in the Universe.

And now, the Ministry of Religious Affairs of the Government of the Union of Myanmar is encouraging and supporting the monastic education schools thought out the State and regions in the Republic of the Union of Myanmar under the guidance of the State Sanghamahanayaka Committee of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar. The main aims and objectives of the Monastic Education Schools are to uplift of morale and morality of the young generations and to understand well the real, basic essence of the Buddhism, and Myanmar culture and traditions which handed down through ancient Myanmar generations. It is found that most of Myanmar young generations of today do not know and understand the real basic essence of Buddhism and the ancient culture and traditions of Myanmar. In fact Myanmar culture and traditions mainly depend on the culture of Buddhism. For the time being, many young novices, boys and girls are attending the monastic education shoots all over the country.

During the periods of the British Colonial Government, the monastic education schools throughout Myanmar faded out and nearly disappeared for not being encouraged and supported by the British Colonial authorities concerned. After Myanmar had regained her Independence in 1948, some of the farsighted learned chief monks, lay devotees and the Government of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar tried to re-introduce the monastic education schools. But they were not completely successful because of confuse and unstable political situation of those days. And so, many young new generations of those days were not able to go to monastic education schools for learning the real basic essence of the Buddhism and the ancient Myanmar culture and traditions. Hence, most of Myanmar young generation who were born in those days did not know well and understand the basic essence of Buddhism and Myanmar culture and traditions.

We can see vividly and clearly that ruthless and cruel activities of killing and beheading innocent people by destructive elements broke out in the period of 1988 destructive. It is learnt that the destructive elements who committed these crimes are most young people who do not know the basic essence of the Buddhism and Myanmar culture and traditions.

According to the bitter and cruel experience of 1988 disturbance, the State Law and Order Restoration Council of the Union of Myanmar of the time decided to encourage and support the monastic education schools which lead to cultivate the young new generation to become good, gentle and polite in future. Besides, the Monastic Institutions, the main centres for the Pariyatti Sasana (learning canonical Texts of the Buddha) which lead to the purification, perpetuation and propagation of the Buddha Sasana have been more supported and encouraged by the Government of the State Law and Order Restoration Council of the Union of Myanmar of the time since 18 September 1988.

An old saying goes, "Whenever religion is pure, the society prospers". The situation of the nation is well-developed and prosperous. When the members of the Order (Bhikkhus) unanimously perform and practice the law and fulfill their religious duties. It is further learnt that there are altogether 1568 Monastic education schools in the Republic of the Union of Myanmar.

THE 47-member State Sangha Maha Nayaka Committee held its plenary session at the Wizaya Dhamma Hall on the Kaba Aye Hill yesterday, attracting its Chairman Sayadaw Dr Bhaddanta Kumarabhivamsa and Union Minister for Religious and Cultural Affairs Thura U Aung Ko.

The Chairman Sayadaw urged the member Sayadaws of three groups to voice constructive criticism of each other's unconventional decisions but cautioned that the frequent correction of bad decisions would lose respect and trust from the Sangha community.

The Sayadaw called for deep contemplation and critical evaluation of a problem from different angles in making a decision, stressing that care should be taken that the decisions for religious issues comply with the existing civil laws and the Buddhist laws called Dhamma Vinaya.

"We must take into consideration the existing civil laws and the Dhamma Vinaya (religious discipline)," the Sayadaw said.

Union Minister Thura U Aung Ko, in his briefing to the members of the State Sangha Maha Nayaka Committee, said that some young monks and novices were found to engage in conduct which is grossly indecent.

He urged the Sayadaws to decisively deal with the issue in a bid to promote Theravada Buddhism, describing the public use of social media as a platform for the ignition of religious and racial tensions.

He also pointed out the need to prevent any scheme designed to orchestrate the collapse of the Sangha community, calling for combined efforts to ensure the promotion and propagation of Buddhism. — Myanmar News Agency

Clinton gets Sanders endorsement in show of party unity

PORTSMOUTH — Democrat Bernie Sanders endorsed former rival Hillary Clinton for president in a display of party unity on Tuesday, describing her as the best candidate to fix the United States' problems and beat Republican Donald Trump in the 8 November election.

With Clinton nodding in agreement beside him, Sanders put aside their bitter campaign for the Democratic nomination and said she would take up the fight to ease economic inequality, make college more affordable and expand healthcare coverage for all Americans.

"This campaign is about the needs of the American people and addressing the very serious crises that we face, and there is no doubt in my mind that, as we head into November, Hillary Clinton is far and away the best candidate to do that," he told a raucous crowd in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, that included plenty of vocal Sanders supporters.

"I intend to do everything I can to make certain she will be the next president of the United States," the US senator from Vermont said.

His endorsement, five weeks after Clinton became the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee, brought the most prominent holdout in the party's liberal wing into her camp. Sanders threw Clinton his support less than two weeks before the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia, where she is to be formally nominated.

"I can't help but reflect on how much more enjoyable this election will be now that we are on the same side," Clinton said of Sanders. "Thank you, Bernie, for your endorsement, but more than that, thank you for your lifetime of fighting injustice."

Trump ridiculed the move in a series of Twitter posts, saying Sanders had abandoned the supporters who flocked to his insurgent campaign to rein in Wall Street and get big money out of politics.

"Bernie Sanders endorsing Crooked Hillary Clinton is like Occupy Wall Street endorsing Goldman Sachs," Trump said on Twitter.

In a statement, the Trump campaign said Sanders was now officially part of the rigged system the senator had criticised during his long primary battle with Clinton.

"Bernie's endorsement becomes Exhibit A in our rigged system — the Democrat Party is disenfranchising its voters to benefit the select and privileged few," said Stephen Miller, a senior policy adviser to Trump.

In a Reuters/Ipsos opinion poll released on Tuesday, Clinton extended her lead over Trump to 13 percentage points, up from 10 points at the end of last week.

The former US secretary of state hopes the Portsmouth appearance with Sanders will help her win over his supporters, some of whom held Sanders signs at the rally and chanted his name. In recent Reuters/Ipsos polling, only about 40 per cent of Sanders backers said they would back Clinton, and the crowd at Tuesday's rally made it clear she still had work to do.

"I am absolutely certain I will not vote for Hillary Clinton," said Gale Bailey, a Sanders supporter and an unemployed graphic designer from Rochester, New Hampshire, who attended the rally in a Sanders T-shirt.

"She's a crook, and I'm not going to vote for a crook," Bailey said, adding that she would write in Sanders' name on the November ballot. The joint appearance concluded weeks of negotiations between the two camps as Sanders pressed for concessions from Clinton on his liberal policy agenda.

It came after Clinton last week adopted elements of Sanders' plans for free in-state college tuition and expanded affordable healthcare coverage. Sanders also successfully pushed to include an array of liberal policy positions in the Democratic platform, which a committee approved on Saturday.

Sanders did not win all of his policy fights, most notably failing to win support for blocking a congressional vote on the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal.

But he told the Portsmouth rally that "our job now is to see that platform implemented by a Democratically controlled Senate, a Democratically controlled House and a Hillary Clinton presidency — and I am going to do everything I can to make that happen."

In an email to supporters after the rally, Sanders said he would still push for changes to the party's nominating process to make it more inclusive. In the months ahead, he will campaign around the country for progressive congressional candidates, he said.

Also on Tuesday, a source with knowledge of the process said the Clinton campaign is vetting James Stavridis, a retired four-star Navy admiral, as a potential vice presidential running mate. Stavridis, who served as supreme allied commander at NATO, is currently dean of the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University. Top Democrats, including President Barack Obama and Senator Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, a favourite of the party's liberal wing, have already announced their support for Clinton, leaving Sanders at risk of being left behind in the Democratic battle against Trump.—Reuters

Amendola: Opening of chapters concrete political message

BELGRADE — Serbian First Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Ivica Dacic on Tuesday received Italy's Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Vincenzo Amendola, who noted that the opening of negotiation chapters 23 and 24 in Serbia's accession talks would be a concrete political message about the continuation of the country's European integration.

Italy has launched preparations to chair a Western Balkans summit in Rome in July next year within the Berlin process, Amendola said, proposing a strengthening of bilateral dialogue and development of cooperation on concrete infrastructure projects involving Italian SMEs. Serbia is highly appreciative of Italy's continued support on the European integration path, Dacic said, welcoming next year's Western Balkans summit in Rome. Vucic and Amendola expressed satisfaction with the high level of bilateral relations and a readiness to improve them further in all areas of mutual interest, an official statement said.—Tanjug

Asking employee to remove hijab is discrimination — EU court advisor

BRUSSELS — Asking a Muslim employee to remove her hijab when dealing with clients amounts to unlawful direct discrimination, a legal advisor to the European Union's top court said in a written opinion on Wednesday.

The case arose when a female employee of a French IT consultancy was fired after refusing to remove her hijab when meeting clients. She challenged this before a French court, which referred the case to the European Court of Justice. "There is nothing to suggest she was unable to perform her duties as a design engineer because she wore an Islamic hijab," Advocate General Eleanor Sharpston wrote.

Opinions by the Court's advocates general are advisory but it usually follows their advice in drawing up a final ruling. While a company could impose a neutral dress code if it pursued a legitimate aim, Sharpston said it was hard to see how such a measure could be seen as proportionate in the present case. France bars civil servants from wearing clothing indicating religious belief, such as a hijab or a Jewish skullcap, but not employees in the private sector. Companies can set dress codes but their exact legal status is disputed.—Reuters

Four drown, six rescued after migrant boat overturns off Greece's Lesbos

LESBOS — Four people drowned and six were rescued when a small boat laden with migrants overturned on Wednesday off the Greek island of Lesbos, the country's coastguard said.

Wednesday's fatalities were the first in the area for some weeks after a European Union deal with Turkey that has helped stem the flow of migrants making the narrow but precarious sea crossing from Turkish shores to outlying Greek islands.

Those who survived said there were 11 people in total on the boat, the coastguard said. The victims included two children.

EU's parting shot: "Good riddance, Cameron"

Alastair Macdonald

BRUSSELS — Europe won't miss David Cameron, a senior EU lawmaker in Brussels said on Wednesday as the prime minister who led Britain to the exit left office and handed on the job of completing its withdrawal from the European Union.

"The UK finally has a new prime minister," Gianni Pittella, the leader of the centre-left group in the European Parliament said in a statement as Theresa May took over the government.

"Goodbye Mr. Cameron. Nobody will miss you."

Other European politicians focused their attention on May, his successor as Conservative leader, who backed Cameron's campaign to remain in the EU but then saw off pro-Brexit rivals once he had resigned after losing the vote on June 23.

European Council President Donald Tusk, whose job it will be to broker negotiations between May and the 27 other national EU leaders, sent a two-sentence letter of congratulation saying that he looked forward to a "fruitful working relationship".

Belgian Prime Minister Charles Michel, a vocal supporter of a more federal European Union, was quick to urge May to do what Cameron refused to do after the June referendum and formally notify the EU that Britain was indeed leaving the bloc.

"We cannot afford a long period of uncertainty. Clarity is in the interest of both Europe and the United Kingdom," he said, adding a salute to Cameron's "tenacity" and "strong leadership".

Pittella, an Italian who leads the second biggest group in the European Parliament, also called on May to serve notice of withdrawal under Article 50 of the EU treaty, which sets a two-year deadline for London to negotiate an exit or simply be bounced out of the EU.

He added: "It must be clear that no negotiations will begin before this is done."

May has said she may not trigger Article 50 for months but many officials expect tentative talks to start soon on how negotiations might work to forge a new relationship between Britain and the EU.

Pittella repeated warnings from across Europe that Britain cannot keep the benefits of access to the EU single market without following EU rules, including welcoming EU immigrants. —Reuters

Islamic State car bomb attack kills seven north of Baghdad

BAGHDAD — A suicide bomber killed at least seven people north of Baghdad on Wednesday, security and medical sources said, in the second bombing claimed by Islamic State in the district in as many days.

Eleven others were injured when the attacker detonated his car, laden with explosives, at a checkpoint.

Islamic State, which regularly carries out such bombings in the capital and other parts of Iraq, where it seized large swathes of territory in 2014, said in an online statement it had targeted the army.

A similar attack in Rashidiya on Tuesday, also claimed by the Sunni Islamist group, killed nine people.

A suicide bombing in the central Karrada district on 3

July, claimed by Islamic State, killed at least 292, making it one of the worst among the hundreds of such attacks carried out in Iraq since US-led forces toppled Saddam Hussein 13 years ago.

It prompted a public outcry in Baghdad, with residents blaming the government for not protecting the capital.

Islamic State has been turning increasingly to suicide bombings, which US and Iraqi officials have touted as proof that battlefield setbacks are weakening the jihadists.

In a US-backed offensive, the Iraqi army has recaptured the cities of Ramadi and Falluja from Islamic State in recent months. The government said Falluja had been a launchpad for the group's Baghdad suicide bombings. —Reuters

Turkey PM Yildirim says aims to develop relations with Syria, Iraq

ANKARA — Turkey aims to develop good relations with Syria and Iraq, and both countries need to be stable for counter-terrorism efforts to succeed, Turkish Prime Minister Binali Yildirim said on Wednesday.

Turkey has long been one of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's staunchest opponents, arguing that only his departure could stabilise Syria. The stance set it at odds with Assad's ally Russia and distanced it from a US-led coalition more focused on fighting Islamic State.

Since taking office in May, Yildirim has repeatedly said that Turkey needs to "increase its friends and decrease its enemies" — an apparent tacit admission that past policies have left Ankara sidelined.

"It is our greatest and irrevocable goal: Developing good relations with Syria and Iraq, and all our neighbours that surround the Mediterranean and the Black Sea," Yildirim said, in comments broadcast live on television.

"We normalised relations with Russia and Israel. I'm sure we will normalise relations with Syria as well. For the fight against terrorism to succeed stability needs to return to Syria and Iraq," he said. Turkey last month announced the restoration of diplomatic ties with Israel after a six-year rupture and expressed regret to Russia over the downing of a warplane, seeking to mend strained alliances. Officials have insisted those moves do not mark a broader foreign policy shift for Ankara. —Reuters

Tocci: Relationship with Russia biggest challenge for Serbia

BRUSSELS — The relationship with Russia is the biggest challenge for Serbia in the process of alignment with the EU foreign and security policy, says Nathalie Tocci, adviser to EU foreign policy and security chief Federica Mogherini and the head of the team behind the new EU Global Strategy.

The EU's new foreign policy and security strategy, envisioning an enlargement into the Western Balkans as a key strategic investment for the future, was presented late last month.

The future of the Western Balkans fully lies in full EU membership and already today, the EU and Serbia face common challenges that can be solved more easily through joint efforts, Tocci told Tanjug in an exclusive interview.

es in the common neighbourhood, can accelerate Serbia's progress towards EU membership, Tocci said.

In the accession process, a country is expected to meet all accession criteria and align itself with common European rules through negotiations, which implies both foreign policy and security, she said.

In that regard, I see the relationship with Russia as the biggest challenge for Serbia — as it gets closer to EU membership, Serbia will be expected to also get closer to the EU in terms of the position regarding Russia, but that is something that cannot happen overnight, she said.

It is a gradual process of alignment, which the EU expects from Serbia in the accession talks, Tocci explained.—Tanjug

Germany will recall soldiers from Turkey if MP visit blocked — vice chancellor

BERLIN — Germany will recall soldiers serving at the Incirlik airbase in Turkey if Ankara continues blocking German lawmakers from visiting the troops, Vice Chancellor Sigmar Gabriel said in remarks published on Wednesday.

Turkey, angered by a resolution passed by the German parliament last month that branded the 1915 massacre of Armenians by Ottoman forces a genocide, has denied German lawmakers access to the base.

"The German army answers to parliament," Gabriel told the regional newspaper Mitteldeutsche Zeitung. "And if parliament cannot visit its army, then the army cannot stay there. This is absolutely clear."

His threat to pull out the 250 soldiers at the base, who are part of NATO operations against Islamic State militants in Iraq, is the clearest sign yet of escalating tensions between the two members of the military alliance.

Though they are crucial partners in the effort to stem mass migration to Europe, Germany and Turkey's relations have taken several blows in recent months.

President Tayyip Erdogan was perturbed by the broadcast of a satirical song about him on German television and in April launched legal action against the comedian who wrote it. The Armenian resolution last month, which prompted Ankara to recall its ambassador, compounded the rift. Gabriel's remarks echoed earlier demands by some German lawmakers that the soldiers should be recalled if Turkey did not change its position.

German forces are currently on missions in around 13 countries, including Afghanistan and Kosovo, as well as conducting monitoring in the Mediterranean. Lawmakers have often visited deployed soldiers, mainly in Afghanistan.—Reuters

Indonesia hopes fishermen can net its South China Sea claims

JAKARTA — Indonesia wants to send hundreds of fishermen to the Natuna Islands to assert its sovereignty over nearby areas of the South China Sea to which China says it also has claims.

President Joko Widodo has launched an unprecedented campaign to bolster fishing, oil exploration and defence facilities around the island chain after a series of face-offs between the Indonesian navy and Chinese fishing boats.

"We are aware that if we don't do this there could be many claims that disrupt the integrity of Indonesian territory," Chief Maritime Minister Rizal Ramli told reporters on Wednesday.

The announcement of the plan came a day after the Permanent Court of Arbitration in the Hague rejected China's historic claims to almost all of the South China Sea and said it had breached the Philippines' sovereign rights by endangering its ships and fishing and oil projects.

Indonesia is not part of the broader dispute over claims in the South China Sea and it has remained neutral following the ruling, calling for peace and stability.

But Indonesia objects to China's inclusion of waters around Natuna being included within its "nine-dash line", a demarcation on China's maps to show its claims.

Ramli said he would seek cabinet approval this month for the relocation of fishermen from the crowded island of Java to Natuna.

Under the plan, the government would move about 400 wooden boats of 30 tonnes or more to Natuna by the end of October. Fishermen who go could get subsidised housing, while the island's ports, power supply and internet will be upgraded.

The programme is expected to boost fishing in Natuna waters from 9.3 per cent of sustainable catchment levels to 40 per cent in less than a year.

"We will build cold storage there. We hope this will become the biggest fish market in Southeast Asia," Ramli said.

Ramli, who also oversees energy as part of his portfolio, said he also would review oil and gas concessions in Natuna and revoke permits from companies that are not developing their blocks.

ExxonMobil, ConocoPhillips, Chevron, and PTT Exploration and Production are among foreign oil companies with stakes in Natuna, which holds one of the world's largest untapped gas reserves.

Indonesia's foreign minister, Retno Marsudi, said no one wanted conflict in the South China Sea and she called on all parties to avoid raising tension.

"We are sure that if all sides respect international law, then it will be easier to achieve regional and global peace and stability," she told reporters.—Reuters

Heavy rain hits northern Kyushu, evacuation advisories issued

FUKUOKA — Heavy rain fell in northern Kyushu in southwestern Japan on Wednesday, prompting local authorities to issue evacuation orders or advisories to some 18,000 people in areas including earthquake-hit Kumamoto Prefecture.

The Japan Meteorological Agency warned of landslides and swollen rivers in northern Kyushu as well as western Japan.

A downpour of 300 millimetres was logged in 48 hours through Wednesday morning in Tsushima, Nagasaki Prefecture, while the city of Dazaifu in Fukuoka Prefecture and the city of Yamaguchi recorded 45.0 mm and 44.5 mm rainfall per hour, respectively.

A woman in her 50s in Fukuoka sustained injuries to her face and legs after a stone wall behind her house crumbled, a city official said.

The heavy rain also disrupted some sections of the Higashi Kyushu Expressway, the West Nippon Expressway Co. said.

Warm and moist air was flowing above the Japanese archipelago from the south as the rain front moved southwards, and the atmosphere in western Japan is expected to remain unstable, the weather agency said.

Up to 250 mm of rainfall is forecast for northern Kyushu, 200 mm for southern Kyushu and the Kinki region, 150 mm in Shikoku, and 120 mm in Chugoku over a 24-hour period until Thursday morning, according to the agency.—Kyodo News

Taiwan seeks two Russian suspects in $2m ATM malware heist

TAIPEI — Taiwan investigators suspect two Russian nationals hacked into a major domestic bank's ATMs last weekend, using malware to withdraw more than $2 million from dozens of machines in the country's first recorded case of its kind.

Combining cybercrime with daylight robbery after a typhoon battered greater Taipei, the suspects may have used a cellphone to trigger 41 First Bank ATMs to dispense fat wads of bills, investigators said on Wednesday. In each case, the still-at-large suspects took the money and left quickly, filmed on close-circuit TV cameras.

As Taiwan officials continue to piece together how the crime was committed, the theft shows growing boldness in attacks on ATMs in Asia. In May, a gang stole $13 million from Japanese ATMs in a three-hour, 14,000 withdrawal spree.

Since discovering the theft on Monday, a range of Taiwan's biggest state-run banks have frozen withdrawals from nearly 1,000 ATMs of the kind used in the heist, supplied by Germany's Wincor Nixdorf. About 4 per cent of Taiwan's national ATM network of 27,200 machines is affected, leaving customers obliged to use other machines.

The Ministry of Justice's Investigation Bureau on Wednesday said two Russian suspects have been identified, but declined to disclose their names. It said it believed the pair left Taiwan early on Monday, and was still investigating whether a possible third one might have been involved.

"So far we think it could have been done remotely, such as via a cellphone, laptop or hacked First Bank staff PC," said Lin Cheng-hsien, a spokesperson for the bureau.

First Bank reported T$70 million ($2.2 million) was stolen from its ATMs in hits that investigators said took place at various times during both daytime and nightfall.—Reuters

UK Labour lawmaker Owen Smith says to run for party leadership

LONDON — A second British Labour opposition lawmaker entered the contest to topple leader Jeremy Corbyn on Wednesday, boosting the veteran left-winger's chances of being re-elected by splitting the support of those who oppose him.

Labour is engulfed in a bitter internal power struggle between Corbyn's supporters in the grassroots membership and the party's lawmakers, who overwhelmingly rejected his leadership after Britain's vote to leave the EU last month.

Owen Smith, Corbyn's former work and pensions policy chief, said he had hoped the situation could be resolved without a "damaging, divisive contest" but despite three meetings with Corbyn, had failed to persuade him of an alternative route.

The leadership contest was triggered on Monday when lawmaker Angela Eagle challenged Corbyn. On Tuesday the party ruled he had the automatic right to stand in the contest without needing to be nominated by lawmakers.

"Jeremy is a good man with great Labour values ... but he is not a leader who can lead us into an election and win for Labour," Smith told BBC radio on Wednesday.

"I have a radical and credible set of policies. I want to put that to the membership, I want to make my case to be the next leader of not just the Labour Party but the next Labour prime minister."

Some lawmakers fear having two candidates run against Corbyn reduces the chances of ousting the leader, by splitting the support of those party members who want to see change.

If Corbyn, who was elected last September and retains strong support among the party's more left-leaning rank-and-file members, is re-elected in the contest, the party may split.

Smith said he did not want to split the party, and would stand by the result of the contest.

"I will be Labour until the day I die," he said.—Reuters

More space adventures as crew return in 'Star Trek Beyond'

LONDON — The crew of the USS Enterprise are back for more space adventures in "Star Trek Beyond", the latest episode in the film reboot of the popular science fiction series that marks its 50th birthday this year.

The television show, which introduced characters like Captain James T. Kirk and Mr. Spock, the half-human, half-Vulcan first officer, followed the crew's missions and has spawned movies and other series since debuting in 1966.

In "Star Trek Beyond", Chris Pine and Zachary Quinto return as the younger Kirk and Spock alongside Simon Pegg as Scotty and John Cho as Hikaru Sulu and this time, they face a new enemy when they are shipwrecked on an unfriendly planet.

"This movie has definitely a retro vibe to it," Quinto said at the film's London premiere on Tuesday. "It's pretty remarkable for something like this to last for half a century and we're all really proud to be a part of it at this significant, celebratory milestone."

Quinto was joined by his co-stars, including Pegg who had the additional role of co-writer.

"It was a big responsibility, 'Star Trek' is precious," Pegg said. "We wanted to do it justice in the most faithful way but we approached it like you would any writing job ... studiously and carefully and never taking it for granted."

The movie has made headlines ahead of its release after Cho said Sulu is openly gay and married in the new film. Actor George Takei, who portrayed the character in the original show and is gay in real life, has said he was "delighted" the movie included a gay character, but the new version of Sulu does not reflect the original vision of late series creator Gene Roddenberry.

"I had spoken to (Takei) and I knew that was coming ... I hope that if he sees the film and sees the way it's treated ... that maybe he'll see some of the positives in time," Cho said. "Maybe he'll warm to it and realise that maybe young people are going to see this, young gay people, LGBT people in the closet perhaps and be encouraged by it."—Reuters

I am a fat-to-fit story: Parineeti Chopra

MUMBAI — Having been on a weight losing spree, actress Parineeti Chopra felt the pressure of Bollywood to be in shape but she is now happy to be fit.

"There are women who are pregnant or are dealing with post pregnancy weight, or teenagers who are obese, from across the world, (they) want to know my story. I am a fat-to-fit story," Parineeti told reporters here at a song launch event.

"I have struggled with my weight. I was big and unhealthy, not chubby. I took it upon myself to work towards this. There was pressure of Bollywood to bring me on right part."

The 27-year-old actress now eats and sleeps well.

"I am fit now. People need to be fit no matter what size they are. I was big and unfit. There are dancers in New York who are big but flexible. It took me a year-and-half to reach here."

The "Daawat-e-Ishq" actress was away from the screen for quite sometime and now post her weight-loss break, she is all charged up.

I come from a different discipline and I have lived my life in a different way. I needed that emotional break. I wanted to settle down."

Parineeti feels the break helped her sort out her priorities.

"It's a different world for me. I come from a world of banking and academics and I had to be in front of camera all the time and had the pressure. I just wanted to sort out some things."

The "Ha-see Toh Phasee" actress is glad that she can wear better clothes now.

"Now I have this dedication and concentration on my work because of the break. I wanted to work on my body, I am 27 years old. I wanted to wear shorts and better clothes and not worry about anything. This one year break was amazing."

Qatar to build Zaha Hadid hotel shaped like desert flower

DOHA — Qatar will construct two buildings designed by late Iraqi-British architect Zaha Hadid, including a tower shaped like a desert flower close to the site of the 2022 soccer World Cup final, a member of its ruling family said on Tuesday.

Sheikh Mohammed bin Hamad al-Thani, the brother of Qatar's Emir, commissioned Hadid in 2013 to create the structures, one a 38-story hotel in the form of a hyacinth and featuring a nine-pointed base to shield visitors from the searing Gulf sun.

Sheikh Mohammed's Al Aifa Holding said in a statement it would construct the tower "designed in response to current and future environmental challenges" by 2020 in the city of Lusail, 23 km (14 miles) north of the capital Doha.

"We often look at nature's systems when we work to create environments, at her unrivaled logic and coherence," Hadid, who died in March, said of the project.

Now led by Patrik Schumacher, Hadid's architecture firm ZHA has announced a number of new projects including a new central business district for Prague and a technology park near Moscow.

In April, the firm said it would complete 36 projects that had been started or were under contract before Hadid's death including an "oyster-like" ferry terminal in Salerno, Italy, the King Abdullah Petroleum Studies and Research Center in Riyadh, and the Mathematics Gallery at London's Science Museum. —Reuters

From wooden glasses to honey, some Greeks innovating to survive

ATHENS — If necessity is the mother of invention, eight years of a crippling recession and dwindling work prospects has compelled at least some Greeks to reboot, switch professions and innovate to survive.

From the island of Syros, handmade wooden spectacle frames are proving a hit with hipsters in Europe and beyond.

Gold-infused organic honey from the rolling hills of Evoia in the east is finding favour with upmarket clients in the United States, London, Hong Kong and the United Arab Emirates. And in an Athens suburb, a carpenter turned to his lifetime hobby of crafting fishing spearguns after his business faltered. His first client was from Russia.

Dimitris Hatzirodos, whose spearguns retail between 450 and 1,500 euros, said the crisis is forcing Greeks to think outside the box.

"When things get tough it gets you thinking, you start thinking differently. When things are easy nobody ever makes difficult choices," he says, sitting in the workshop that he and his brother inherited from their father.

More than 400,000 Greeks have emigrated abroad since the country's financial crisis started in 2009. Those who stayed are lucky to find jobs — a quarter of the population is unemployed, and earnings have fallen on average 40 per cent. National output has fallen by a quarter since 2008.

Periklis Therrios, 36, briefly migrated to Canada. But home beckoned.

He and his partner Eleni Vakondiou, 37, turned to making hand-crafted spectacle frames around 2012, some of them using recycled materials. The idea came over a coffee, after earlier endeavours with furniture flopped.

"It was very difficult, and there were many times when we thought about giving up, but we believed in our efforts, we believed that we would make a product that could stand on its own in the market," said Vakondiou.

"There were moments when our (food) cabinets at home were empty because whatever income we had went towards research and development," she says.

From a small workshop on Syros the couple started with a production of 350 pairs a year. They say they are now on track to making 2,000 this year, retailing for between 250 and 300 euros.

In Evoia, in the heart of the Greek countryside, Yannis Karypidis and Stevi Theodorou administer beehives left by Theodorou's grandfather. Last year they sold 60,000 jars of organic honey. Production has already exceeded 70,000 jars for the first half of 2016.

Former advertising executive and accountant Karypidis, 35, said the couple had decided to move to the United Kingdom, but a last trip to Evoia changed their minds. —Reuters

Special Israeli film screening is for the dogs

TEL AVIV — Dog lovers and film buffs enjoyed a treat when a cinema invited owners to bring their pet pooches to a special screening of the film, "The Secret Life of Pets."

The event, arranged by the Tel Aviv-Jaffa municipality at the Roof Top Cinema of the Azrieli Mall, was billed as the first of its kind for pets and their owners.

"We have 25,000 people in Tel Aviv that have dogs and we decided to do an amazing event just for them," said Ruth Hayat, one of the organizers of the event. "People who have dogs can come here and enjoy a fun evening with their dogs." —Reuters

Rooney looking forward to Mourinho era

LONDON — Manchester United striker Wayne Rooney admits the arrival of Jose Mourinho has given him added motivation for the season ahead.

Former Chelsea boss Mourinho has suggested he preferred to play Rooney in a more attacking role, rather than see him pull strings from midfield as he did under predecessor Louis van Gaal.

Rooney will be looking to forge a formidable strike partnership with new signing Zlatan Ibrahimovic, after a dearth of goals under the Dutchman last season.

“I’m really excited to be working with Jose this season,” the 30-year-old told the club’s official magazine. “He’s one of the best managers in the world and it’s an exciting time for Manchester United.”

“I’ve always respected him both as a man and a manager.” “I like to think I’m always motivated as a player but I’d be lying if I said I wasn’t a bit more motivated when a new manager comes in.

“He’ll bring all these qualities with him and I’m sure he’ll have his own ideas, but one of the biggest assets will be his experience.” — Reuters

Pacquiao to return to the ring in late 2016

TORONTO — Manny Pacquiao is planning to fight again later this year, just three months after announcing his retirement from boxing, ESPN reported on Tuesday.

Pacquiao, who said his win over Timothy Bradley in April was his final bout, would fight on 29 October or 5 November in Las Vegas against a yet-to-be-determined opponent, his promoter Bob Arum told ESPN.

Since Pacquiao’s “farewell” bout three months ago, the 37-year-old former eight-division world boxing champion won a senate seat in the Philippines.

According to the report, Arum had placed a hold on the Mandalay Bay Events Centre in Las Vegas for a possible Pacquiao return on 15 October but the southpaw’s responsibilities forced a change of plans.

“Manny wants to come back. The problem is he can only come back if it doesn’t interfere with his senate duties,” Arum said in the report.

“We had pencilled him in for 15 October at Mandalay Bay but we were informed that is no longer possible because he has to spend that week leading up to 15 October formulating the budget in the senate and doing the votes.

“So he has to be there for that week, so that knocks out that week. He can’t mess around with that. So now we’re looking at 29 October or 5 November. The question is building availability because we want to do the fight in Las Vegas.”

Pacquiao’s unanimous decision win over Bradley was his first fight in nearly a year after his loss to Floyd Mayweather. He had said he was bringing the curtain down on his career to concentrate on politics and his family. Pacquiao adviser Michael Koncz said in the report that the southpaw, while committed to politics, is happiest when he is in the ring. “Manny’s primary concern and obligation is to fulfil his senatorial duties,” Koncz said. — Reuters

Mourinho hopes United players will forge close bond in China

LONDON — Manchester United’s pre-season tour of China this month, when they face Manchester City and Borussia Dortmund, will give the players an opportunity to forge a close bond, manager Jose Mourinho has said.

United’s first game under Mourinho will be against last season’s Bundesliga runners-up Dortmund in the International Champions Cup in Shanghai on 22 July.

The 53-year-old Portuguese manager will also renew hostilities with old adversary Pep Guardiola, who replaced Manuel Pellegrini as City’s manager, on 25 June.

“I hope to see a group, from an emotional point of view, coming together and getting to know each other better and understanding each other better,” Mourinho said in an interview with adidas’ Front Row. “It’s important from a football point of view, but also from a human qualities point of view, that’s very important. I think the pre-season tours are also for the club dimension.” United will take on Premier League champions Leicester City in the annual Community Shield game at Wembley on 7 August. China gets its richest man to back ‘best football competition in Asia’

BEIJING — China, backed by its richest man, has struck a deal with FIFA to host the first China Cup from next year, a competition that will pit its national side against three international “first-class” teams — and hopefully pave the way to soccer glory.

Chinese property tycoon Wang Jianlin, whose Dalian Wanda conglomerate is already a high-level FIFA sponsor, said on Wednesday that his group and the Chinese Football Association would host the contest in the southern city of Nanning: four games played over a week every January.

European clubs often have a break around that time, potentially allowing national sides to pit their best — as China hopes. Eventually, it wants a total of eight teams to play.

“We aim to become the best football competition in Asia,” Wang told reporters in Beijing. “We will use all possible measures to ensure we achieve this.”

China would qualify automatically for a contest that does allow them to earn points for global rankings — an opportunity for a country that wants to climb the FIFA table where it is currently languishing at 81, below Equatorial Guinea and Haiti. China is preparing to compete for a spot in the 2018 World Cup.

Soccer in China has been plagued by poor performances on the field and match-fixing scandals. But President Xi Jinping, a self-professed avid soccer fan, has spoken in the past of “three wishes” for China: to qualify for another World Cup since their first and only appearance at the 2002 finals, to host a World Cup, and to eventually win one.

China has since said it wants to turn its team into one of the world’s best by 2050.

“We are duty-bound as people in the soccer industry, as members of the Chinese Football Association, to vigorously develop Chinese football,” said Yu Hongchen, vice president of the Chinese Football Association.

“This is our responsibility and it is also the demand of the times.” Dalian Wanda has been at the forefront of China’s push into the business of sport, building up a sports arm which already owns a 20 per cent stake in Spanish soccer club Atletico Madrid.—Reuters
