Survey reveals over 1,700 plots of vacant land within Yangon's industrial zones

A COMPILED list of over 1,700 plots of vacant land from within industrial zones of the greater Yangon Region will be presented to regional government tomorrow, according to the Directorate of Industrial Supervision and Inspection for Yangon Region.

The majority of vacant plots from among Yangon's 29 industrial zones are reportedly located within the Myaung Takar Industry Zone.

"Of course, these plots have been fenced off. They're completely void of any enterprise implementation; they're all left sitting idle. Some industrial zones feature only a few vacant plots, while some use just two or three plots for the storage of raw materials. It looks as though their using up a great deal of land with one form of enterprise. The land is used up for warehouses, offices and housing. In actual fact, their [factories] only take up two-thirds of their space." said U Tin Oo, head of the Directorate of Industrial Supervision and Inspection for Yangon Region.

Work began on compiling a list of vacant plots of land within all of Yangon Region's industrial zones on 19 May this year, which has revealed many instances of land for the construction of factories being used in lieu for storage, offices and staff accommodation.

Landslide kills four in Phakant

FOUR migrant miners died in a landslide in Hpakant that occurred on 12 July.

The landslide happened at a mountain of dumped soil from jade mines in the evening when seven migrant workers were searching for a jade among dumped soil.

Local authorities stopped searching for the bodies at night, due to possibility of landslide again.

To prevent landslides, local authorities have suggested that migrant miners squatting around at-risk areas be relocated to safer areas and that mining companies dump their waste soil in accordance with technical safety rules.

When miners began using heavy machinery to extract jade from mines in Myanmar in 2005, migrant workers across the country flowed into the area to scavenge small jade stones from the discarded mine soil.—GNLM

Yangon gov't prepares to bring e-Yangon payment system online within six months

Ye Khaung Nyunt

THE Yangon regional government is preparing to launch the 'e-Yangon' system, a money transfer medium, within six months and the public will be able to access information by calling a phone number (ph 1881) upon completion of the project, said Yangon Region Chief Minister U Phyo Min Thein at a meeting involving officials from a one stop service centre in the Thilawa Special Economic Zone in the second week of this month.

"We are striving to make the e-Yangon system available within six months", said the Chief Minister, adding that the system must be undertaken to make Yangon corruption free.

The e-Yangon project will be implemented based on progress of the one stop service in the Thilawa SEZ and the regional government is preparing the service to be available in 44 townships of Yangon, except Kokogun Township.

Yangon Region Minister for Kayin National Race Naw Pann

Thinzar Myo expressed her view that transparency will be boosted and corruption can be diminished thanks to the e-Yangon system.

Public awareness of the system will be made via the media following the launch of the system, added the regional minister.

According to sources, e-payment is being used in the Thilawa SEZ where applying for permits can be completed at the one stop service centre and an online system is available for industrial applications.

Survey reveals over 1,700 plots of vacant land . . .

In order to mitigate any grievances among industrial zone owners during conducting of the vacant plots survey, the data collection was reportedly carried out systematically by a team made up of the Urban Housing Department, Yangon City Development Committee (YCDC), representatives of industrial zones concerned, together with members of the township level General Administration Departments.

Chairpersons of industrial zones have voiced that a survey on vacant plots of land has been collected but that they are still to receive any instruction as to how the plots of land must be handled.

"The government led team has carried out their survey. But a directive is still yet to be passed on whether or not the vacant land is to be confiscated. They've already issued a directive which states that brick walls must be built by three months of industrial zone implementation, with completion of buildings within a year." said U Aye Thaug, chair of the Shwe Lin Pan Industrial Zone.

A vast number of vacant plots of land have reportedly been discovered in industrial zones located with Yangon's northern district, while industrial zones situated in east and southern districts of the region have utilized a great deal more of land within their zones.—Myit-makha News Agency

Central Bank encourages foreign banks to proceed in seeking licenses

THE Central Bank of Myanmar (CBM) has called on foreign banks to start preparing to seek licenses to operate in accordance with its rules and regulations.

A total of 13 foreign banks have sought permission to launch branches in Myanmar. Among them, Bank for Investment and Development of Vietnam (BIDV), E. Sun Commercial Bank from China (Taipei), Shinhan bank from South Korea and State Bank of India have been selected tentatively.

Among these four banks, BIDV is the first to be permitted to launch its banking services in Myanmar.

Induced breeding of climbing perch tested in cooperation with World Fish Myanmar

INDUCED breeding businesses of climbing perch (anabas testudineus), which is a native species of Myanmar, is being tested in cooperation with World Fish Myanmar according to an announcement of the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Irrigation last Friday.

According to the agreement to effectuate the fishery development between World Fish Myanmar and the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Irrigation, the induced breeding of the climbing perch and research related to fish farming methods has been conducted. Now, these experimental breeding businesses in Pantanaw hatchery in Ayeyawady have shown fruitful results.

Climbing perch breeding study has been conducted under a series of processes: preparation of the lake, maintaining of fish species, reduced breeding, feedstuffs and the observation of growth.

Preparation of the lake includes water treatment, filling the lake, cleansing the lake, the maintaining of a stable artificial environment and the installation of Hapa.

Climbing perch have been collected from natural lakes and ponds in order to maintain the fish species sector. Aquatic feedstuff is introduced into the lake twice a day.

In the breeding stage the birds are chosen and then injected with single dose of hormone which comes from the pituitary gland of rohu. Seven or nine milligrams of hormone dose are used for female climbing perch while four or five milligrams of hormone are used for male climbing perch. The growth of the birds is monitored once a week, according to the ministry.—City News

Farmers to receive advanced loan under advanced purchase system

GROWERS of crops, who in some circles are referred to as 'farmers', will receive advanced loans depending on their crops under an advanced purchase system, the renowned Win Star variegated vegetables trading business in Tatkon has reported.

The advanced purchase is offered for both mixed cropping and multiple cropping. All the brokerages do not offer advanced purchase. Some brokerages offer the advanced purchase only with the close farmers. If they have to give loans to strangers, they need to be guaranteed by a respected person.

Advanced purchase has risks because there is a possibility of losses. However, the price of advanced purchase is always lower than the market price at a harvest time, at which time the loans will be repaid. The farmers do not need to pay interest, said U Maung Maung Win, the proprietor of the Win Star variegated vegetables trading business.

An advanced payment of between Ks50,000 and Ks500,000 will be provided for various things such as sunflowers, groundnuts, green grams, pigeon peas and mung beans in the coming growing season.

"The growers of paddy, chili, tomatoes and onion can also ask for loan. Almost all the growers take payments from the advanced purchase system. We do not need to give the interest but we are faced with the price manipulation," said U Win Naing Tun, a grower from Tatkon Township. Local seeds merchants also make the advanced purchase.

Myanmar's seed industry suffered from heavy losses because of advanced purchase system in 2008. The government had to intervene to save the farmers, and the advanced purchase lost its popularity.—Zar Zar

Petrol price need to be aligned with world price

THE Ministry of Electricity and Energy will call upon petrol distributors to keep the price of petrol in Myanmar equal to international prices according to U Myint Zaw, managing director of the Myanmar Petroleum Products Enterprise (MPPE), in order to allow vehicle owners to avoid suffering from higher petrol prices than necessary.

Myanmar's petrol

market is dependent on the price of Singapore's crude oil. Therefore, there is a small gap between Myanmar's petrol price and that of the countries in the Middle East.

The ministry is taking a closer look at petrol prices by forming an exclusive team. The Ministry of Electricity and Energy has granted licences to a total of 1,759 petrol stations.—200

Japan emperor abdication debate could stir discussion on female succession

TOKYO — Reports that Japanese Emperor Akihito intends to abdicate within a few years could re-open debate about female succession, but any such move is likely to provoke strong opposition within the current conservative ruling party.

The 82-year-old monarch, who has had heart surgery and been treated for prostate cancer in recent years, expressed his intention to abdicate in a few years to the Imperial Household Agency, public broadcaster NHK said on Wednesday.

No reason was cited and agency officials later denied the earlier reports.

Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and other officials on Thursday declined to comment, but Akihito has been cutting back on official duties recently.

His place has been taken by his heir, 56-year-old Crown Prince Naruhito. But Naruhito has only one daughter, so since only males can inherit the Chrysanthemum Throne, the throne after Naruhito would pass to nine-year-old nephew Hisahito.

No Japanese emperor has abdicated since 1817 and the Imperial Household Law governing the royal family system would have to be revised to allow this, a process requiring parliamentary debate that could take years and might spill over into other areas, such as female succession.

"This is something that has needed to be fixed," said Kenneth Ruoff, head of the Center of Japanese Studies at Portland State University, of the laws on abdication.

"When they open up the debate they will have to debate all kinds of things."

Before Hisahito, no male had been born into the imperial family for more than four decades. This prompted discussion of equal inheritance for women, a move opposed by traditionalists eager to preserve a male line they believe goes back more than 2,000 years. Most Japanese backed the proposed change and advisors to then Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi recommended that women be given equal rights to inherit, but debate was shelved when Hisahito was born the next year.

In March, Japanese officials including Prime Minister Shinzo Abe protested when a UN committee said it intended to criticise male-only inheritance as discriminatory. They said the UN move was "totally inappropriate" and disregarded Japanese history. The committee withdrew its criticism.

Key parts of Abe's political base want him to steer the nation back towards a traditional ethos including pride in the ancient imperial line. Given that Hisahito is the only male of his generation and women in the imperial family leave it upon marriage, long-term succession remains far from assured. Proposed solutions include allowing women to remain and set up branch families, but debate has languished.

Pakistan says leader of school attack killed in US drone strike

PESHAWAR (Pakistan) — The alleged mastermind of the 2014 attack on a school in Pakistan in which more than 150 people died, most of them children, has been killed in an American drone strike in Afghanistan, the Pakistan military and sources in the Pakistani Taliban said.

General Asim Bajwa, director general of the Pakistani army's media division, reported the death of Umar Narai, also known as Khalifa Umar Mansoor or Khalid Khurasani, in a message on Twitter.

US Defence Department spokesman Peter Cook confirmed that US forces carried out an air strike in Afghanistan's eastern Nangarhar province on 9 July, killing Umar Khalifa and four other militants. Cook said Khalifa, a leader of the Tariq Gidar Group, was killed in a strike that targeted members of Islamic State-Khorasan Province. The State Department had put the Tariq Gidar Group, a faction linked to the Pakistani Taliban, on its list of "Specially Designated Global Terrorists" in May. The Pakistani Taliban made no official comment. One senior member of the group said the movement had decided not to comment on the death until a successor had been chosen.

"It's a huge loss to the small but most effective Taliban faction of Khalifa Umar Mansoor," the commander said. There is no such prominent figure of his status to run his organisation."

The strike was the second in the space of two months against a senior insurgent leader close to the frontier between Afghanistan and Pakistan.

In May, Mullah Mohammad Akhtar Mansour, leader of the Afghan Taliban, was killed by a drone on the Pakistani side of the border. The Pakistani Taliban is waging war against the Pakistani state and is separate from the Afghan Taliban. It claimed responsibility for the attack on the Army Public School in Peshawar, in northwest Pakistan, in December 2014, in which at least 132 children, nine staff and several attackers were killed.

Cambodian Prime Minister heads to Mongolia for ASEM-11

PHNOM PENH — Cambodian Prime Minister Samdech Techo Hun Sen flew to Mongolian capital Ulan Bator on Thursday for the 11th Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM) summit, to be held on 15 and 16 July, a senior official said.

Sry Thamarong, minister attached to the prime minister, said the summit will discuss many important issues, namely assessment of ASEM's past 20 years' experience, building hard and soft connectivity between Asia and Europe, and future generation of ASEM.

"The summit is very important to enhance relations and cooperation between Asia and Europe for common development and prosperity," he told reporters at Phnom Penh international airport before the departure.

He said the summit will also touch on climate change, sustainable development and multi-lateral trading systems, disaster risk reduction and management, energy security, food security, water management, and regional and international issues.

He added that there will be a retreat session on 16 July in which the ASEM leaders will discuss a wide range of issues, including anti-terrorism, migration, human rights, interreligious understanding, anti-money laundering, and combating drug trafficking, cross-border crimes and human trafficking.

According to the official, Hun Sen will address the plenary session of the summit on the topic "Soft Connectivity". —Xinhua

China's legal setback could spur more South China Sea claims

AMSTERDAM — China's resounding defeat in a legal battle with the Philippines over territorial claims in the South China Sea could embolden other states to file lawsuits if Beijing refuses to compromise on access to the resource-rich region.

There are several avenues for litigation that countries could pursue rather than risk any action at sea that would worsen military tensions, legal and security experts said.

The Permanent Court of Arbitration (PCA) in The Hague concluded that China had violated the Philippines' economic and sovereign rights. Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, Taiwan and Viet Nam also have unresolved, overlapping claims on parts of the South China Sea. A five-judge tribunal dismissed China's "Nine-dash line" — a 69-year-old claim to roughly 85 per cent of the South China Sea — saying it was unlawful under the 1982 UN Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS).

The ruling is binding for Beijing and Manila, but it also set a legal precedent by determining that UNCLOS rules take precedence over China's historic claims. That bolsters the treaty's standing in international law, experts said. "It will have enormous impact on future jurisprudence and on the perceived legitimacy of other claims in the South China Sea and around the world," said Gregory Poling, head of the Asia Maritime Transparency Initiative. Although China rejected the Hague court, which has no enforcement powers, Poling said that the vast majority of international arbitration awards over the last century have eventually been respected. "Reputational damage matters to modern states," he said.

The United States has launched a round of quiet diplomacy to persuade countries around the region not to move aggressively to capitalise on the ruling, several US administration officials said on Wednesday. "Reputational damage

"This is a blanket call for quiet, not some attempt to rally the region against China, which would play into a false narrative that the US is leading a coalition to contain China," said one official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe private diplomatic messages. —Reuters

Economic growth through more privatisation

Kyaw Thura

FAVOURED by a great wealth of untapped natural resources, our country has much to gain in inclusive growth and sustainable development by implementing fundamental reforms in the privatisation of services in transport and electricity just as in telecommunications.

The government has vowed at every opportunity to incentivise the private sector as a means to propel sustainable economic growth. The simplest thing for the government to encourage the private sector starts with the reduction in the number of state-owned services which can better thrive under private ownership. In this respect, encouragement should be given to open and competitive markets.

Economic researchers are unanimous in the phenomenon that private sector development is central to the success of economic reform, but they warn that its benefits should not be limited to the business people only.

An importing thing to note is that market competition does not necessarily mean market monopolisation. It is, therefore, incumbent on the government to protect the end-users from being overcharged for essential consumer goods by adopting development strategies that will guarantee consumer welfare.

In addition, the government should implement effective competition policies that will enable private industries to become more competitive home and abroad and willing to provide the best deals for customers. With this end in view, many countries and regional blocs are busy with the adoption of effective competition laws and frameworks designed to empower the poorest section of society, thereby ensuring social mobility.

All things considered, the government's commitment to political reform will be judged ineffective as long as the grass roots of society remain to be hit the hardest in an outbreak of political turmoil.

Trump nears end of vice presidential search, to announce pick Friday

WASHINGTON — Republican Donald Trump conducted last-minute talks with his top potential picks for his vice presidential running mate on Wednesday and said he would announce his choice on Friday in New York.

“I will be making the announcement of my Vice Presidential pick on Friday at 11am in Manhattan. Details to follow,” the presumptive Republican presidential nominee tweeted on Wednesday night.

Trump had a breakfast meeting on Wednesday with Indiana Governor Mike Pence, and later sat down for talks with former US House of Representatives Speaker Newt Gingrich. His family met on Tuesday with New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, who speaks to Trump on a near-daily basis.

In addition, US Senator Jeff Sessions, 69, of Alabama, a fourth potential candidate for the No.2 spot who has been a close adviser to Trump, was seen going into the Conrad Hotel in Indianapolis, where Trump was.

A source close to the campaign said Trump appeared to be leaning toward Pence but that he could always change his mind. “It’s not done until it’s done,” the source said.

Trump seemed to be trying to decide between Pence and Gingrich, the source added.

The New York businessman is to be formally nominated at the Republican National Convention next week in Cleveland. Traditionally, the vice presidential choice is used to build enthusiasm among party loyalists.

Pence, who faces a Friday deadline on whether to have his name on the ballot to seek another term as governor, said he was humbled to be considered for Trump’s running mate.

“I think he’s giving it very careful consideration, and we’re humbled to be a part of that,” Pence told reporters later. “There are a number of other noteworthy Americans that they are considering, and I’m just honored to be on that list.”

Republicans close to the campaign said they believed Trump had narrowed his short list to Pence, Gingrich and Christie. He has campaigned with all three in recent days as he girds for perhaps the most consequential decision of his campaign ahead of the 8 November election.—Reuters

EU proposes new asylum rules to stop migrants crossing Europe

BRUSSELS — The European Commission proposed more unified EU asylum rules on Wednesday, in a bid to stop people waiting for refugee status moving around the bloc and disrupting its passport-free zone.

In an unprecedented wave of migration last year, 1.3 million people reached the EU and most ignored legal restrictions, trekking from the Mediterranean coast to apply for asylum in wealthy Germany, prompting some EU countries to suspend the Schengen Area system that allows free passage between most EU states.

“The changes will create a genuine common asylum procedure,” said EU Migration Commissioner Dimitris Avramopoulos.

“At the same time, we set clear obligations and duties for asylum seekers to prevent secondary movements and abuse of procedures.” The United Nations refugee agency UNHCR said it had concerns about the new rules and said the new system must not lower standards of protection and asylum.

The proposal would standardise refugee reception facilities across the bloc and unify the level of state support they can get, setting common rules on residence permits, travel papers, access to jobs, schools, social welfare and healthcare.

It would grant prospective refugees swifter rights to work, but also put more obligations on them, meaning that if they do not cooperate with the authorities or head to an EU state of their choice rather than staying put, their asylum application could be jeopardised.

The five-year waiting period after which refugees are eligible for long-term residence would be restarted if they move from their designated country, the Commission said.

UNHCR spokesman William Spindler said people should be dissuaded from such movements, not punished.

The proposal also spells out more cases in which asylum seekers could be detained, something Jean Lambert, a British Green Party member of the European Parliament, said showed the EU was taking the wrong attitude to people seeking sanctuary.—Reuters

Sole Japanese survivor of Dhaka attack says he hid in garden

YOKOHAMA — Tamaoki Watanabe, the sole survivor among the eight Japanese caught in a 1 July terrorist attack at a restaurant in Bangladesh, told Japanese police that he managed to hide from attackers in the establishment’s garden, investigative sources said Wednesday. The 46-year-old, currently hospitalized in Tokyo to recover from a gunshot wound suffered in the attack, reportedly ran from the Holey Artisan Bakery cafe as the shooting started, taking cover in its garden during the 12-hour siege that left 20 hostages dead. Kerry seeks Russian cooperation despite deep misgivings within US administration

WASHINGTON — US Secretary of State John Kerry heads to Moscow on Thursday to again seek deeper Russian cooperation in the war against Islamic State in Syria, but he faces strong opposition from defence and intelligence officials who argue that Washington and Moscow have diametrically opposite objectives in the country.

Kerry's trip, which State Department officials say is his second to the Russian capital this year and his third in 12 months, takes place as US-Russian relations have worsened with tit-for-tat diplomatic expulsions, aggressive Russian manoeuvres towards US aircraft and vessels, and a disregard for a cessation of hostilities in Syria, where Russia has bombed US-backed rebels.

Relations between Moscow and Washington also remain strained over the Ukraine crisis and what the Kremlin considers NATO's unjustified activities along its borders, raising fears that disagreements could escalate into confrontations, either accidental in Syria or the result of miscalculations in the air and naval encounters from the Baltics to the Black Sea.

Yet Kerry, it seems, still hopes for closer collaboration with Russia, to the disbelief of many officials who say Washington has no strategy on how to deal with the challenges Russia poses in Europe and Syria.

“It isn't clear why the secretary of state thinks he can enlist the Russians to support the administration's goals in Syria,” said one US intelligence official.

“He's ignoring the fact that the Russians and their Syrian allies have made no distinction between bombing ISIS and killing members of the moderate opposition, including some people that we've trained,” the official said, using an acronym for the militant group. “Why would we share intelligence and targeting information with people who've been doing that?”

US intelligence officers are incensed by the administration's continued overtures to Russia, in part because they say the Russians knew that two rebel camps they bombed this week were far from any Islamic State fighters and housed US-backed rebels or their families.

The first attack, on Monday, killed at least 123 people and injured scores more, many of them CIA-trained rebels and military or intelligence officers from allied Arab countries, said three US intelligence officials. The second, on Tuesday, killed at least 12 rebel fighters at a nearby base, they said.

The camps, the officials said, are in a no-man's-land on Syria's border with Jordan devoid of any Syrian troops or Islamic State fighters, and the Russians attacked it deliberately, the officials said. It was not immediately possible to seek comment from officials in Moscow. Other officials argue it is naive to think that because the Russians say they, too, are seeking a negotiated end to Syria's civil war -- which, according to the United Nations, has claimed some 400,000 lives -- Moscow's goal is compatible with that of the United States and its Arab and European allies.

“The Russians want a settlement that would keep (Syrian President Bashar al-Assad or some replacement acceptable to them in power,” said a defence official, who like others who discussed the schism in the administration agreed to do so only on condition of anonymity.

“The president has said that Assad has got to go, and our allies, especially the Saudis, hold that view very strongly. In fact, they keep asking us why we're cozying up to Moscow.”—Reuters

Suspected Islamist recruiter kills four at Kenyan police station - officer

NAIROBI — A suspected recruiter for Somalia's al Shabaab militant group being held in a west Kenyan police station shot dead at least four officers there on Thursday after snatching a weapon from a guard, an officer said. The incident took place at Kapenguria police station in a region near the Ugandan border.

Al Shabaab has launched a series of attacks against Kenya in recent years, including using local recruits. The group says the attacks are aimed at driving Kenyan forces out of Somalia where they are part of an Africa force fighting al Shabaab.

The suspect was detained on Wednesday for interrogation and grabbed the weapon during a routine roll call early on Thursday morning, said the officer, who asked not to be named because he was not authorised to speak publicly.

“I can confirm that four police officers have been killed but they could be more,” the officer told Reuters. Kenyan television channel KTN said as many as six officers had died in the continuing stand-off. KTN and other Kenyan media said police reinforcements had been deployed.

“The suspect has locked himself inside one of the rooms and we are trying to get him out,” the officer said. “We have surrounded the station.”

A police spokesman and a regional official had no immediate comment.—Reuters

Britain's new PM May gives Johnson big job, says needs time before Brexit talks

LONDON— Theresa May became Britain's prime minister on Wednesday with the task of leading it out of the European Union, and quickly named leading 'Brexit' supporters including former London mayor Boris Johnson to key positions in her new government.

The former Conservative interior minister, 59, said after being appointed by Queen Elizabeth that she would champion social justice and carve out a bright new future for Britain after last month's shock referendum vote to quit the EU.

"We will rise to the challenge. As we leave the European Union we will forge a bold new positive role for ourselves in the world, and we will make Britain a country that works not for a privileged few, but for every one of us," she said outside 10 Downing Street, vacated hours earlier by David Cameron.

Cameron stepped down after Britons rejected his entreaties to stay in the EU, a decision that has set back European efforts to forge greater unity and created huge uncertainty in Britain and across the 28-nation bloc.

May faced immediate pressure from EU leaders to serve formal notice of Britain's withdrawal and set the clock ticking on a two-year countdown to its final departure.

In phone calls with German Chancellor Angela Merkel and French President Francois Hollande, May said she needed time.

"On all the phone calls, the prime minister emphasised her commitment to delivering the will of the British people to leave the European Union," a spokeswoman for May said.

"The prime minister explained that we would need some time to prepare for these negotiations and spoke of her hope that these could be conducted in a constructive and positive spirit."

Just over an hour after entering her new office, she started naming ministers, appointing the steady and experienced foreign minister Philip Hammond to take charge of the finance ministry. He replaces George Osborne, whose determination to balance Britain's books made him synonymous with austerity. In a major surprise, May named Johnson, a leading eurosceptic who had until recently been seen as her main rival for the prime minister's job, to take over as foreign secretary.

Other prominent 'Leave' campaigners were also rewarded. One, David Davis, took the key role of

Britain's Home Secretary Theresa May speaks during her Conservative party leadership campaign at the Institute of Engineering and Technology in Birmingham, England, Britain on 11 July 2016. PHOTO: REUTERS

Secretary of State for Exiting the European Union. Another, Liam Fox, was named to head a new international trade department.

May herself had sided with Cameron in trying to keep Britain inside the EU, so needed to reach out to the winning Leave side in order to heal divisions in the ruling party and show her commitment to respecting the popular vote.

"Brexit means Brexit" has quickly become her new mantra. By awarding such a senior job to Johnson, she also showed a conciliatory side. The two had clashed over policing in London while Johnson was serving as mayor. And since last month's vote, for which he campaigned vigorously, Johnson had suffered widespread criticism and ridicule for failing to present a clear Brexit plan and swiftly dropping out of the leadership race.

With his unkempt blonde hair, bumbling humour and penchant for Latin quotations, the man known to Britons simply as 'Boris' will be the government's most colourful figure, but a controversial choice for conducting sensitive diplomacy with world leaders.

Asked by a reporter whether he would apologise to US President Barack Obama for controversially saying the "part-Kenyan" president was biased against Britain because of "an ancestral dislike of the British empire", Johnson said: "The United States of America will be in the front of the queue."

The quip was a reference to a comment by Obama during Britain's EU referendum campaign that the country would be at the back of the queue for trade deals if it voted to leave the bloc. Among other appointments, rising star Amber Rudd switched from the energy ministry to take May's old job as Home Secretary.—Reuters

Cameroon is abusing rights in its fight against Boko Haram — Amnesty

YAOUNDE — Authorities in Cameroon have arbitrarily arrested more than 1,000 people as part of their fight against Islamist militant group Boko Haram and dozens have died of disease or been tortured to death, Amnesty International said on Thursday.

Up to eight people are dying each month in Maroua Prison in the capital of Far North region and prisoners are kept in inhumane, overcrowded and unsanitary conditions, Amnesty said in a report. "Cameroon is pursuing the right objective, but in arbitrarily arresting, torturing and subjecting people to enforced disappearances the authorities are using the wrong means," said Alioune Tine, regional director for the human rights group.

Amnesty called on the government to implement measures to prevent abuses including an end to arbitrary arrests and torture and said the government should ensure detainees have access to their families and to lawyers. The government is yet to comment on the report, which was based on interviews starting last October with more than 200 people in the Far North region that borders Nigeria and Chad.—Reuters

Ranking shows rich nations not leading way to end poverty, inequality

NEW YORK — Most of the world's richest countries failed to earn top marks on their progress toward reaching the United Nations' goals to end poverty and inequality, with only Germany and the United Kingdom in the top ten, according to a list published on Thursday.

The United States ranked 25th on the index of 149 countries, scoring poorly on promoting clean energy and fighting inequality and climate change, said the ranking by the UN Sustainable Development Solutions Network and Bertelsmann Stiftung, a German social responsibility foundation.

UN member states agreed last September to 17 ambitious goals to tackle the world's most troubling problems such as inequality, poverty and climate change.

The agenda is to be implemented over the next 15 years, with a big push globally to win public support.

The index measuring nations' progress is meant to boost interest in the global goals, said Jeffrey Sachs, director of the UN Sustainable Development Solutions Network.

"We put this report

out ... as a kind of spur," he told the Thomson Reuters Foundation. "Remember these goals? You signed up to them. Here's where you are."

Scoring at the bottom of the list were the Central African Republic and Liberia, while Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Finland and Switzerland topped the list.

Germany ranked sixth, and the United Kingdom ranked tenth, it said.

The United States ranked 25th, below Hungary and above Slovak Republic, it said.

Among other economic giants, China ranked 76th, Japan was 18th, France ranked 11th, India was 110th, Brazil was 52nd and Canada was in 13th place, it said.

When the agenda of global goals was passed, experts warned that some countries might be reluctant to address certain issues such as climate change and gender equality.

A study by Bertelsmann Stiftung last year predicted that the United States would be among nations least likely to meet goals to end poverty and combat climate change.—Reuters

Police officers pay their respects ahead of the funeral for Officer Lorne Ahrens in Plano, Texas, US, on 13 July 2016. Five officers, including Ahrens, were killed in a shooting incident in Dallas on 7 July. PHOTO: REUTERS

First funerals held for Dallas police slain in racially motivated ambush

DALLAS — Thousands of police officers joined by ordinary citizens attended funerals on Wednesday for three of the policemen shot dead in a racially motivated ambush attack last week that intensified America's long-running debate on race and justice.

At the Dallas megachurch called The Potter's House, officers by the thousands crowded into the funeral for Dallas Area Rapid Transit officer Brent Thompson, who had married a fellow officer just two weeks before last Thursday's attack.

"I know many of you have dealt with these things quite often," pastor Rick Lamb of Northside Baptist Church told the crowd. "Today is about Brent and trying to bring some closure to this family as they finish the job that they didn't want to start, but had to start last week." Funerals were also taking place on Wednesday for Sergeant Michael Smith, 55, and Officer Lorne Ahrens, 48, of the Dallas Police Department.

The funerals came a day after President Barack Obama praised the slain officers' heroism, condemned the attack as an "act not just of demented violence but of racial hatred" and made an impassioned plea for national unity. The five officers were killed by a former US Army Reserve soldier who told police that he was angry about police killings of two black men in Louisiana and Minnesota earlier that week and wanted to "kill white people," especially police.

Funerals for the other two slain officers, Michael Krol, 40, and Patrick Zamarripa, 32, are expected later in the week. The shootings in Louisiana and Minnesota were the latest in a series of high-profile police killings of black men in various US cities that have brought intense scrutiny of police use of force, particularly against black suspects.

The police slain in Dallas last week were patrolling a demonstration decrying the killings by police of Alton Sterling, 37, in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and Phi-lando Castile, 32, outside St. Paul, Minnesota. Sterling was killed after officers responded to a call that he had threatened someone with a gun. Castile was killed during a traffic stop.

In Baton Rouge, Sterling's 15-year-old son, Cameron Sterling, urged people to refrain from violence as they demand reforms in the US criminal justice system. "I feel that people in general, no matter what the race is, should come together as one united family," Cameron Sterling told reporters in the parking lot of the Triple S Food Mart, where his father was killed. "I want everyone to protest the right way. Protest in peace. ... No violence, whatsoever."—Reuters

Hollywood stands behind Jennifer Aniston's take on media sexism

LOS ANGELES — Hollywood celebrities are lining up behind actress Jennifer Aniston after she penned a blog criticising the media for the way it scrutinizes female stars.

Melissa McCarthy, Jason Bateman and Olivia Wilde were among the A-Listers who showed their support.

"Everybody needs to stop tearing down women," McCarthy, 45, said on "Entertainment Tonight," after declaring she was "one hundred thousand billion per cent" behind Aniston.

Former "Friends" star Aniston, 47, published the blog, "For the Record," on the Huffington Post on Tuesday, writing that she was sick of being harassed by photographers and tabloid reporters.

"For the record, I am not pregnant," she wrote. "What I am is fed up. I'm fed up with the sport-like scrutiny and body shaming that occurs daily under the guise of 'journalism,' the 'First Amendment' and 'celebrity news.'"

"The objectification and scrutiny we put women through is absurd and disturbing," Aniston also wrote, saying that "we define a woman's value based on her marital and maternal status."

Aniston's husband, actor Justin Theroux, posted an image of her to his Instagram page with the hashtag #wcv for "Woman Crush Wednesday." He linked to her letter and wrote, "Here's just one reason why."

Aniston, who People magazine named as the most beautiful woman of 2016 in April, said she wrote the blog because she "wanted to participate in a larger conversation" even though she does not use social media.

The blog post was "liked" on Facebook more than 27,000 times by Wednesday afternoon.

"The way I am portrayed by the media is simply a reflection of how we see and portray women in general, measured against some warped standard of beauty," Aniston wrote.—Reuters

Director Ross explores family and parenting in 'Captain Fantastic'

LOS ANGELES — Writer and director Matt Ross says his award-winning "Captain Fantastic" film about a father and his children draws on some elements of his own childhood as well as his own hopes as a parent.

In the movie, for which Ross won a directing prize at the Cannes Film Festival in May, Viggo Mortensen plays a father of six who takes his family from their isolated forest abode to the city.

"There's some autobiographical elements. My mother started some alternative living...communities in northern California and Oregon and I lived on those as a child. My mother is not Viggo's character. This is just fiction," Ross told Reuters.

"I think it really was aspirational for me, the kind of father I want to be... There's a couple of gifts we can give our children. One is to be present in their lives...and the other is to try and I think... every parent does this, we try and teach them so they don't make the same mistakes we do."—Reuters

Calvin Harris takes to social media to criticise Taylor Swift

LOS ANGELES — DJ and producer Calvin Harris criticised his former girlfriend, pop star Taylor Swift, on social media on Wednesday, for making him "look bad" after a celebrity news publication revealed that Swift had written Harris' latest hit song under a pseudonym.

People magazine, citing Swift's representative, said Swift had written "This is What You Came For," which Harris released as a collaboration with R&B singer Rihanna in April.

The magazine reported that

Swift had written the song under the pseudonym 'Nils Sjoberg' while the couple were dating, and that Swift became upset over an interview in which Harris said he did not think he would work with her in the future.

Representatives for Swift did not respond to Reuters for comment.

"Hurtful to me at this point that her and her team would go so far out of their way to try and make ME look bad at this stage though," Harris said, in a series of tweets directed at Swift.

Harris praised Swift's lyric-writing talents and said she had wanted to keep their collaboration secret.

Swift, 26, and Harris, 32, split up last month after dating for more than a year. Swift, who was named 2016's highest-earning celebrity by Forbes magazine this week, has recently been photographed with British actor Tom Hiddleston.

Harris also hinted at a long-suspected feud between Swift and pop star Katy Perry, saying "I know you're off tour and you need someone new to try and

Leonardo DiCaprio's foundation grants USD 15.7m to stop climate change

LOS ANGELES — Hollywood star Leonardo DiCaprio's foundation is set to donate USD 15.7 million to help solve environmental issues, such as climate change.

The 41-year-old actor announced that the Leonardo DiCaprio Foundation is to pledge the huge sum to fund conservation and environmental programmes to help combat climate change, reported Us Weekly.

"Today we are greatly increasing our level of vital grant making and strategic partnerships to help solve some of the world's most pressing environmental challenges," the actor said.

The latest pledge means DiCaprio's organisation has donated USD 59 million since 1998. To help oversee the latest grants, the Hollywood actor has appointed a new CEO, Terry Tamminen, to the foundation.

"At this critical time, we are pleased to have Terry join us as CEO. Terry is a proven leader, with the experience and passion necessary to work alongside (executive director) Justin (Winters) and the entire LDF team to further strengthen and expand the impact of our global efforts," the "Revenant" actor added.

Earlier this year, DiCaprio, who is a staunch environmental campaigner, praised Pope Francis for helping to try to combat climate change. "He's been inspiring and revolutionary, to come

Amber Heard meets ex-girlfriend amid legal battle with Depp

LONDON — Model-actress Amber Heard reunited with her ex-girlfriend Tasya Van Ree for lunch earlier this week amid her bitter legal battle with estranged husband Johnny Depp.

The 30-year-old actress was spotted tucking into lunch with Ree, whom she split from five years ago, at Republique in Los Angeles earlier this week, reported Female First.

Heard, who brought her pet Yorkshire Terrier along with her, arrived at the plush eatery five minutes after the 40-year-old photographer before spending an hour catching up over delicious grub.

The lunch date comes two months after Heard filed for divorce from Depp, 53. She claimed in court at the time that her decision was prompted by the actor's physical assault.

The actress was granted a temporary restraining order, which instructs Depp to remain 100 yards away from his wife at all times, although her request to ban him from seeing her pet pooch was thrown out.

The pair, who met on the set of 2011 film "The Rum Diary", are not thought to have put a pre-nuptial agreement in place before they wed in February 2015 in Los Angeles, followed by another ceremony in the Bahamas.—PTI

Israeli athletes pay tribute to Munich Games victims ahead of Rio

TEL AVIV — Athletes and officials representing Israel at the Olympics in Rio next month held a memorial service on Wednesday for the 11 Israelis killed by Palestinian gunmen during the 1972 Munich Games.

Two members of the Israeli team — gymnast Neta Rivkin, who will be Israel's flag bearer at the opening ceremony, and wind-surfer Shahar Tzuberi — laid a wreath at a memorial monument during the ceremony in Tel Aviv that was also attended by relatives of those killed.

On 5 September 1972, Israeli Olympic team members were taken hostage at the athletes' village by Palestinian gunmen from the Black September group.

Within 24 hours, 11 Israelis, five Palestinians and a German policeman were dead after a standoff and subsequent rescue effort erupted into gunfire.

Hollande's haircuts set French social media alight

French President Francois Hollande leaves after the weekly cabinet meeting at the Elysee Palace in Paris, on 13 November 2013. PHOTO: REUTERS

PARIS — French social media was abuzz with suggestions of novel haircuts for Francois Hollande on Wednesday after it emerged that the French president's receding hairline was maintained by a costly, round-the-clock hairdresser.

Satirical newspaper Le Canard Enchaîné triggered the fuss with a report, later confirmed by the government, that the 61-year-old was paying nearly 10,000 euros a month to keep his hair in shape.

"Everyone gets haircuts," government spokesman Stephane Le Foll said. "This hairdresser had to abandon his salon and he's on tap 24 hours a day."

le Foll confirmed the report that Hollande's hairdresser was paid 9,985 euros (8,342 pounds) per month, but stressed that the operational budget of the presidential Elysee Palace was cut by 15 to 20 per cent after Hollande took over from Nicolas Sarkozy in 2012.

Twitter fans made fun of it all with altered photographs and videos, showing Hollande with rock-and-roll or punk haircuts, and in various other guises as the Queen of England, former Paris Saint-Germain soccer star Zlatan Ibrahimovic, and the president's ex-partner Valerie Trierweiler.

Sunderland confirm manager Allardyce in England talks

LONDON — Sunderland have given permission to the Football Association (FA) to speak to manager Sam Allardyce about the vacant England post, the Premier League club said on Wednesday.

Allardyce, 61, is one of the favourites to succeed Roy Hodgson, who resigned last month after England's humiliating exit from the European Championship at the hands of Iceland.

Sunderland said the ongoing speculation over the future of Allardyce, who, according to British media, has already been interviewed by a three-man FA panel, was "extremely damaging" to the club.

"Sam is very much key to our plans," the club, which narrowly escaped relegation last season, said in a statement.

"After what was an extremely challenging season, we are keen to see a period of stability, both on and off the field, and we want him to remain as manager of our football club."

Sunderland said it allowed the FA to contact Allardyce at the manager's request but sought a quick end to the uncertainty.

"...we urge the FA to respect the disruption that this process is causing and bring about a swift resolution to the matter," the club added. Bournemouth manager Eddie Howe, former England coach Glenn Hoddle, Arsenal manager Arsene Wenger and United States manager Juergen Klinsmann have also been linked with the post by the local media.—Reuters

Barcelona sign France defender Digne from Paris St Germain

MADRID — Barcelona have signed France international Lucas Digne from Paris St Germain on a five-year contract for an initial fee of 16.5 million euros (£13.8 million), the Spanish champions said on Wednesday.

The 22-year-old left back spent last season on loan at AS Roma, where he scored once in 32 Serie A appearances as the Italian club finished third in the table.

"FC Barcelona have reached an agreement with Paris Saint-Germain FC to sign the 22-year-old French player Lucas Digne for the next five seasons," the club said on their website (www.fcbarcelona.com). "Barca have paid an initial 16.5 million euros with another four (million) possible according to individual and team results. Digne's buy-out clause is 60 million euros."

Digne, who also had a spell with French club Lille, was in his country's squad at the European Championship, where they lost in the final to Portugal in extra time. He has 13 caps.—Reuters

Ghost of victories past return to haunt Korean champions

SEOUL — As the rest of the world's top women golfers were playing for millions of dollars in prize money at the US Open last week, South Korea's Ko Jin-young was half a world away dreaming of what might have been.

One of the brightest young talents in women's golf, Ko made her mark on the world stage by finishing second at last year's British Open and has risen to 33rd in the world despite playing outside the US circuit, where events offer far more money and world ranking points than the domestic Korean Tour.

While Ko received an invitation to the US Open, the most prestigious tournament in women's golf, and one she dearly wanted to play, there was one thing holding her back - the threat of a $100,000 fine from the KLPGA.

The 21-year-old, who won the 2015 Chojung Sparkling-Yongpyong Resort Open with SBS, was a victim of the KLPGA's "Defending Champion" rule, which demands golfers repay all the prize money from a tournament they win if they do not come back the following year.

Aimed at discouraging players from taking up invitations to foreign tournaments when the dates clash with Korean events, the KLPGA told Reuters 'Regulation 14:2' helped the Tour flourish by giving sponsors value for money and bringing in more fans.

"It is a player's duty to defend their title," the KLPGA told Reuters by telephone. "The regulation is a promise to fans that the champion will be back next year. It also makes sponsors happy to have the champion come back.

"Appearing in a tournament as a defending champion is an honour for a player."

That honour can sometimes become a burden, however.

Players have had to turn down invites to high-profile foreign tournaments including the US Open where this year's champion Brittany Lang pocketed $810,000 from the $4.5 million prize pot.

The KLPGA said that, to date, it had never had cause to impose the fine, suggesting Korean players take their defending champion duties very seriously.

That or they are unwilling to repay the prize money.

With domestic tours around the world losing many of their top players to the lucrative US and European circuits, the KLPGA is not alone in threatening financial sanctions on those who do not defend their titles.—Reuters

Murray to miss Britain's Davis Cup quarter-final

LONDON — Wimbledon champion Andy Murray will miss Britain's Davis Cup quarter-final clash against Serbia with captain Leon Smith naming Kyle Edmund and James Ward as his two singles players on Wednesday.

Murray was instrumental in helping Britain to their first Davis Cup victory for 79 years last November, but had suggested it was unlikely he would feature against Serbia, who are also missing their talisman Novak Djokovic.

In the doubles, Andy's brother Jamie, ranked fifth in the world, will partner doubles specialist Dominic Inglot.

"This date is a real nightmare for everybody, not just for him (Andy Murray), because it's not easy to change surface again," Smith told reporters.

"I was hopeful last week that he would play but then he goes and wins Wimbledon and has Olympics and US Open coming up and I hope he does well there also. As a team we are all delighted for him".

"I hope he comes out Thursday or Friday to support the team."

World number 73 Daniel Evans, who was named in the initial squad, also missed out due to personal issues and a shoulder injury.

Murray has committed to playing at the 2016 Rio Olympics, where he will look to defend his title.

The quarter-finals will take place between 15-17 July at the Tasmajdan Stadium in Belgrade.—Reuters
