Water-saving tech, veg gardens grow hope in Myanmar's Dry Zone

PAKOKKU — Myo Myint fondly remembers when his one-acre farm regularly produced 100 baskets of rice. But as rainfall became erratic in this arid region, he started growing betel leaves, a less thirsty cash crop.

This summer, the 50-year-old is considering leaving fallow his land in Myanmar's central “Dry Zone” because when the stream behind his house dries up in March, the cost of irrigation outstrips the income from any crop.

A 2016 drought followed by heavy rains already battered his farm.

“Water is becoming more scarce every year. I want to keep growing the crops but there's not much I can do without water,” he said, sitting beneath the ground floor of his stilt house.

His village of Myay Ni Twin, in Pakokku township, is around two hours' drive from Bagan, Myanmar's top tourist destination known for its ancient Buddhist temples.

“When I was growing up, the stream didn't go dry. Now there's less rain, and it's very hard to plant things,” he said.

2nd Pyidaungsu Hluttaw 4th regular session holds 13th day meeting

AT the 13th day meeting of 2nd Pyidaungsu Hluttaw 4th Regular Session held at 10 am yesterday, Mahn Win Khaing Than, Speaker of the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw, announced that the State goodwill visit of Myanmar delegation led by President U Htin Kyaw at the invitation of King of Cambodia from 3 February 2017 to 6 February 2017 has been put on record by the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw.

dustries, the Ministry of Industry & petro-chemicals transportation and distribution branches of Myanma Petrochemical Enterprise, the Ministry of Electric Power and Energy would be suspended currently. Currently-suspended projects are not those being implemented just on these days. When the State-owned finances invested in respective fiscal years were re-scrutinised, the amounts were found to have been very great in volume. Provided that they are suspended or abolished, we should take notice that there will be wastages of people's finances. Being national multi-development projects, we should study and assess as to which kinds of potential consequences these projects will meet. And, the public should be informed transparently which kinds of projects will be substituted for the development of the country. So, the above-said 44 factories should be divided into two categories—those to be suspended completely and those to be supervised by the government."

Over the discussion made by U Thein Tun, Hluttaw representatives took part in the discussion.

Afterward, Mahn Win Khaing Than, Speaker of the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw, announced that putting the motion, clarification made by members of respective Union Organisations and getting the approval of the Hluttaw concerning approval, refusal and reduced allowance concerning the projects included in Annexe 2 of bill on the project will be carried out.

the time when they are tasked with tough duties of capacity building and coordination and cooperation. The programme also enhanced their ability of making legislation, conducting representation and watching. By studying the comments made at home and abroad they would understand the leadership role. International Democracy Day for the year 2016 was held in Hluttaw complex in Nay Pyi Taw on 15 September under the theme "Democracy 2030". At the ceremony papers that will help assist marching towards the goal of a federal state in which all citizens are enjoying prosperity.

Plans for the good of the nation

Works done by the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw in a year can be seen as measures for sustainable development of the nation including promoting human rights.

"In line with the motto 'People's Voice, Hluttaw's Voice, People's Will, Hluttaw's Will, People's Expectation, Hluttaw's Implementation.', Hluttaw representatives are always observing the real life of the people and their desires as they are elected by the people to represent them. They are never losing sight of serving the interests of the people." said Mahn Win Khaing Than, the speaker.

28 Laws under debate

There left to discuss 28 laws during the remaining four-year period of the Second Pyidaungsu Hluttaw. These laws are designed to bring about prosperity of the people.

The laws include various topics such as systematic spending of budget allotted for projects across the country; ensuring systematic taxation; protecting of people's rights and guaranteeing their security; matters on foreigners; dams and reservoirs for farmers; worksite safety and health for workers; smooth transportation for the convenience of people; and matters relating to companies for smooth flowing of foreign investments.

Myanmar recently emerged from decades of military dictatorship only to face a bigger existential threat.

The Southeast Asian nation of 50 million people is the world’s second most vulnerable country to climate change, according to the Global Climate Risk Index from research group Germanwatch. Studies have shown the onset of the monsoon is becoming more variable, increasing the risk of drought.

The Dry Zone, an area comprising 58 townships in Mandalay, Magwe and Sagaing, is home to around 10 million people, who mostly rely on rain-fed agriculture. It suffers from year-round water shortages.

A recent assessment by the Myanmar Climate Change Alliance (MCCA), an initiative funded by the European Union and United Nations, predicted a temperature increase of up to 3 degrees Celsius and a shorter monsoon in Pakokku by 2050.

Farmers like Myo Myint — already struggling to make ends meet - will bear the brunt of those changes.

His village has a well, but pumping water costs too much, he said. So he was intrigued by the prototypes of soil moisture sensors in the hands of Tayzar Lin, a product designer with Proximity Designs, a Myanmar-based social enterprise that develops affordable products for farmers.

“I’ve been curious since I saw something similar on Facebook,” said the farmer, as Tayzar Lin plunged into the soil a boxy contraption with a dial at the top and an alloy-tipped brass rod at the bottom. The hand on the dial moved to green, showing the soil still held water. Red means dry, and blue means too much water.

Myo Myint dreams of watering only when needed, instead of every two days as he now does, to save the precious resource.

WASTED WATER

Agriculture - including livestock, fisheries and forestry - contributes nearly 40 per cent of Myanmar’s GDP and employs around half its workforce, according to

Andrew Kirkwood, director of the Livelihoods and Food Security Trust Fund (LIFT), a poverty reduction fund supported by 12 governments.

“Agriculture is extremely important to Myanmar’s economy and future growth,” he said.

A 2013 study funded by LIFT identified the Dry Zone as Myanmar’s most water-stressed region and one of its most food-insecure areas. Inexpensive water sensors made abroad are already available, but their instructions are in English and they are not widely used, nor calibrated by soil type.

Proximity Designs’ sensor works with loam and clay, and its staff will train farmers to use it properly, the firm said.

The device - expected to retail at an affordable price of around Ks30,000 ($22) - is now being tested in three Dry Zone townships, said Proximity’s user research manager Louisa-Jane Richards. A study of growers of flowers, vegetables and betel - a mild stimulant that is chewed - found they were over-irrigating by around 30 per cent, she said.

Cutting that to 15 per cent could save a farmer with 0.5 acres (0.2 hectares) around 170 gallons of water a season.

HOME GARDENS

Families in the Dry Zone are also getting help to grow nutritious food in gardens using drip irrigation and hydroponics. Non-profit Terre des Hommes (TdH) Italy has set these up in 45 villages with funding from LIFT.

Shwe Bon Thar, a dusty village in Myingyan township, shares a pond with five other villages. But when its water disappears in the dry season, locals must rely on acidic well water and fresh vegetables become pricey.

Maung Maung, 46, now makes Ks1,000 a day selling mint from the hydroponic garden behind his house, a 3-metre by 2-metre plot of vivid green surrounded by sandy soil. The gravity-fed system irrigates leafy vegetables in discarded water bottles while leftover water collected at the bottom is recycled.

Maung Maung, who uses about 5 gallons of water a day, also grows mustard leaves, morning glory and lettuce, which go into the family meal.

“We used to eat vegetables only when we could afford it, about three times a week. Now we eat fresh, pesticide-free vegetables every day,” he said.

The extra income from selling his surplus produce will help in the coming dry months. Like many villagers, his main crop is pigeon pea, whose price has plummeted this year.

SYSTEM-WIDE SHIFT

Beyond immediate food and water needs, the Dry Zone is also experiencing dramatic shifts.

In many villages, most farmers are in their forties and fifties, as young people have left. Maung Maung’s three adult children work at factories in Mandalay, Myanmar’s second-biggest city.

Pasquale Capizzi, MCCA’s chief technical advisor, said Myanmar needed to tackle both immediate natural disasters and the more gradual impacts of climate change.

“Response ... must involve society as a whole”, encompassing local and national government, businesses, communities and civil society, he said.

“You must adapt with different crops, different agricultural techniques, different mechanisation and productivity improvement - but in some areas you may have to be prepared to learn another trade,” he said.

Climate change will intensify risks such as cyclones, floods and droughts, he added, but will also have “silent effects” on soil salinity, health and yields.

People’s efforts to adapt, said Capizzi, must be supported to reinforce “the innate resilience of communities not to accept fate, but to bounce back and improve”.

Never let it be like throwing water on the sand!

Khin Maung Oo

GENERALLY speaking, we all are born to our parents, but accurately speaking, born to our community, to our society and to our nation. To make it clear, here, we think we need to give the life of our national leader, Bogyoke Aung San as an example. We all know that he was born to U Hpar and Daw Su, on Saturday 13 February 1915. He strived for his life, for his future in the early phase of his life. But he devoted his life to the Independence struggle, since the time he became a university student, till his last days. So, we can say that Bogyoke Aung San was born to our country. Likewise, we have many well-known figures in the political, military, literary, academic, and various other sectors. They also spent the early parts of their lives for success and for their survival. We benefitted from their efforts in many ways. Some made tremendous efforts for the country in the very beginning, but their beliefs, wrong views and changing minds led them to the wrong paths and eventually got what they deserved, our disrespect.

Today, we have prominent high-ranking leaders in the administrative, military and national ethnic sectors. Undeniably, they entered their respective societies with original pure minds, intentions and pure efforts. According to human nature, they as well can change their minds. As said by State Counselor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, we all need to be broad-minded. Just seeing the present brief benefits is a narrow-minded outlook. We had to live under the colonial rule for over a century. Out of sheer desire to liberate ourselves from being slaves of the colonial rulers, our fore fathers, in fact the whole populace including national ethnic races sacrificed their lives for our country's freedom and sovereignty. In this way, we gained the Independence which we aspired to, after losing many lives. Sorrowfully enough, since then till now, many parts of the country have become conflict areas full of strife and instability. At the time when most children in urban areas have been savoring the fruits of Independence, displaced children are running for their lives, absolutely not for food. They were brought to this state by mistrusts and misunderstandings among the leaders. Hence, they have no alternative but to clear up these misunderstanding, so that they can reach an agreement for furthering the peace process.

Armed conflicts are taking place not only in Myanmar, but across the world. These problems cannot be solved by the use of arms. All are urgently needed to come to the negotiation tables to move the peace process towards a successful outcome. So long as nationwide peace cannot be achieved, our country will not develop its economy. As for the country, it will still lag behind much more than others. Our children's future will be gloomy days ad infinitum. We all enjoyed young and youthful days. Today's leaders in the political, administrative and national ethnic sectors underwent bitter experiences. We deeply acknowledge this and we simultaneously want our youths to acknowledge their endeavors. All the State leaders, military and national ethnic leaders, as well as, the youths who are leaders-to-be, need to be broad-minded in the interest of the younger generations to come.

Are we willing and ready to abandon our stubbornness. Are we ready to discard our narrow-mindedness and our short-term visions? Failing that, our past and present efforts for the future will be like throwing water on the sand.

New initiative to use big data to advance social good

Eden Estopace

THE big data capabilities of mobile operators will be put to good use to address humanitarian crises, including epidemics and natural disasters.

Sixteen of the world's biggest operators, which collectively account for over two billion connections across more than 100 countries, have signed up to support GSMA's Big Data for Social Good initiative launched at the Mobile World Congress held recently in Barcelona, Spain.

The 16 operators were Bharti Airtel, Deutsche Telekom, Hutchison, KDDI, KT Corporation, Millicom, MTS, NTT DOCOMO, INC., Orange, SK Telecom, Telefónica, Telenor, Telia, Turkcell, Vodafone, and Zain.

"A year ago, the mobile industry became the first sector as a whole to commit to the UN Sustainable Development Goals and, as outlined in our Mobile Industry Impact Report published in September, we are already affecting all 17 Goals to varying degrees," said Mats Granryd, Director General, GSMA. "We are now focused on amplifying and accelerating our industry's impact in achieving the SDGs, and the initiative will contribute greatly to addressing some of the biggest challenges facing humanity: epidemics and natural disasters."

GSMA said that according to a study published by The Royal Society, 15 million people die and millions more become seriously ill each year as a result of infectious diseases, which are spread through human contact as well as other sources, such as mosquitoes.

It's also estimated that 1.8 billion people were affected by a disaster in the last decade and economic losses due to disaster amounted to $1.5 trillion from 2003 to 2013.

Through the Big Data for Social Good, mobile operators will provide key insights based on anonymized meta-data generated by their networks to support the response in these critical situations. For instance, by monitoring the flow of people to and from impacted areas, public health organizations can more effectively respond to prevent epidemics, slow the spread of disease and better target relief efforts. With access to mobile network insights, humanitarian agencies can more accurately aid evacuation, response and recovery efforts.

Trials of Big Data for Social Good, focusing on epidemics, will start from June 2017 in Bangladesh, Brazil, India, Myanmar, and Thailand. Operators involved in the pilot project include Bharti Airtel in India, Telefónica in Brazil, and Telenor in Bangladesh, Myanmar, and Thailand.

The multi-operator pilot is set to develop common capabilities to monitor, alert, predict and manage the spread of diseases that, if unaddressed, could create epidemics. The trials will enrich this information with third-party data sources such as hospital intakes, death counts, and weather data, among others, to provide meaningful insights that local and international government and humanitarian agencies can use to make decisions on when, where and how to deploy resources.

The GSMA expects to publish the results of these trials at Mobile World Congress in February 2018.

The United Nations Foundation is a supporting partner of the project and will provide coordination and integration with the broader ecosystem, including organizations such as Global Partnership for Sustainable Development Data (GPSDD) and the Digital Impact Alliance (DIAL).

Kathy Calvin, President and CEO of the UN Foundation, said data holds enormous possibilities to advance social good and should be used better with innovation and in partnership to save lives, empower more women, and ensure more inclusive digital societies.

"Big Data for Social Good will build on examples from across the globe, of operators large and small, in developed and developing economies, investing in big data to improve society across a number of areas," added Granryd. "It also complements the experience and insights gained through GSMA programs such as Disaster Response, mHealth, Connected Living and others, with an emphasis on delivering accelerated, demonstrable impact that can be extended further to address other areas of global concern."—<http://www.enterpriseinnovation.net>

Union Minister warns gem industry of environmental damage

THE Union Minister for Natural Resources and Environmental Conservation U Ohn Win warned gem extractors about prioritising economic benefits over environmental concerns when mining for precious stones.

"The gem entrepreneurs should extract the nationally owned gem resources in limited quantities to be able to give heritage to the next generation and make adjustments to harmoniously balance the socio economy for local people in mining areas with profits from the gem extractions," said Union Minister U Ohn Win, Chairman of Myanmar Gems and Jewellery Emporium Organizing Central Committee.

"The gem producers need to follow basic principles such as avoiding environmental impact by conserving the damaged environment caused by gem extraction and produce benefits for all," said the Union Minister at the meeting for Myanmar Gems and Jewellery Emporium Organising Central Committee held yesterday in Nay Pyi Taw. The Minister urged gem entrepreneurs to sell the finished products made by technology as a priority over selling raw gems, to improve finished products in the domestic market and to penetrate the international market by producing high-quality finished products.

During the meeting, members of gem industries-related committees presented plans for the gem exhibition to be held in March 2017, displaying, selling in Myanmar Kyats, setting the prices, security, transportation and information releases.

The gem exhibition will be open from March 19 to 24 at the Mani Yadana Jade Hall in Nay Pyi Taw and sell at Myanmar Kyats.

The gem exhibition will be held with the aim of supplying raw stones to finished product producers, boosting the finished products industry, creating job opportunities, controlling illegal gem trading and supporting finance generation for the gem extractors and national gem traders.—Myanmar News Agency

Price of land near new Thanlwin Bridge rise tenfold

LAND prices near the Thanlwin Bridge project in Chaungzon, Mon State have increased tenfold during the past few years, ever since it was learnt that a bridge would be built across the Thanlwin River, linking the island of Belu Kyun with mainland Myanmar for the first time, residents said.

"The price of land has risen quickly to a very high level within two or three years," said Ko San Maung, a real estate agent residing in Mawlamyine Township, adding that the majority of buyers are from other regions and states.

Entrepreneurs are eyeing locations near the project area to purchase land in order to implement hotel projects, deep sea port projects, resort projects and filling stations. Those businesspersons continue to buy land in downtown Chaungzon, Daye Vil-

Currently, the price for an acre of farmland near the approach road to the bridge under

South Korean court throws president out of office, two dead in protest

SEOUL — South Korea's Constitutional Court removed President Park Geun-hye from office on Friday over a graft scandal involving the country's conglomerates at a time of rising tensions with North Korea and China.

The ruling sparked protests from hundreds of her supporters, two of whom were killed in clashes with police outside the court.

Park becomes South Korea's first democratically elected leader to be forced from office, capping months of paralysis and turmoil over a corruption scandal that also landed the head of the Samsung conglomerate in jail.

A snap presidential election will be held within 60 days.

She did not appear in court and a spokesman said she would not be making any comment nor would she leave the presidential Blue House residence on Friday.

"For now, Park is not leaving the Blue House today," Blue House spokesman Kim Dong Jo told Reuters. Park was stripped of her powers after parliament voted to impeach her but has remained in the president's official compound.

The court's acting chief judge, Lee Jung-mi, said Park had violated the constitution and law "throughout her term", and despite the objections of parliament and the media, she had concealed the truth and cracked down on critics.

Park has steadfastly denied any wrongdoing.

The ruling to uphold parliament's 9 December vote to impeach her marks a dramatic fall from grace of South Korea's first woman president and daughter of Cold War military dictator Park Chung-hee, both of whose parents were assassinated. Park, 65, no longer has immunity as president, and could now face criminal charges over bribery, extortion and abuse of power in connection with allegations of conspiring with her friend, Choi Soon-sil.

Prime Minister Hwang

Kyo-ahn was appointed acting president and will remain in that post until the election. He called on Park's supporters and opponents to put their differences aside to prevent deeper division.

"It is time to accept, and close the conflict and confrontation we have suffered," Hwang said in a televised speech.

A liberal presidential candidate, Moon Jae-in, is leading in opinion polls to succeed Park, with 32 per cent in one released on Friday. Hwang, who has not said whether he will seek the presidency, leads among conservatives, none of whom has more than single-digit poll ratings.

"Given Park's spectacular demise and disarray among conservatives, the presidential contest in May is the liberals' to lose," said Yonsei University professor John Delury.

Relations with China and the United States could dominate the coming presidential campaign, after South Korea this month deployed the US THAAD missile defence system in response to North Korea's stepped up missile and nuclear tests.

Beijing has vigorously protested against the deployment, fearing its radar could see into its missile deployments. China has curbed travel to South Korea and targeted Korean companies operating in the mainland, prompting retaliatory measures from Seoul.

The Seoul market's benchmark KOSPI index and the rose after the ruling.

The prospect of a new president in the first half of this year instead of prolonged uncertainty will buoy domestic demand as well as the markets, said Trinh Nguyen, senior economist at Natixis in Hong Kong.

"The hope is that this will allow the country to have a new leader that can address long-standing challenges such as labour market reforms and escalated geopolitical tensions," he said.—Reuters

Toyota, Suzuki chiefs talk business with Modi

NEW DELHI — Toyota Motor Corp. President Akio Toyoda and Suzuki Motor Corp. Chairman Osamu Suzuki met Thursday with Prime Minister Narendra Modi for talks on their business operations in India, local media reported.

After the meeting, the prime minister's office said in a statement that the two Japanese companies' auto production "will promote Make in India, and contribute to employment generation," according to the reports.

The visit came after Toyota and Suzuki last month signed a memorandum of understanding about a possible business partnership in areas such as environmental, safety and information technologies.

"The partnership is expected to bring together Toyota's global leadership in technology and manufacturing, with Suzuki's strength in manufacture of small cars, especially in India. It is expected to enable India to use new technological developments," the statement said.

According to Japan External Trade Organisation statistics, Suzuki's India unit commanded the largest share of 46.5 per cent in the Indian auto market in 2015. The Toyota group also saw its cars sell well.—Kyodo News

Indonesia to send mission to China to promote tourism

JAKARTA — Indonesia would send a mission to Shanghai to join China's upcoming largest Business to Business (B to B) Meetings, Incentives, Convention and Exhibition (MICE) event from 21 to 23 March to tap potential Chinese visitors, a senior official at Indonesian Tourism Ministry said Friday.

"We hope that through the Incentive Tourism and Convention Meeting (IT&CM) event in Shanghai, our MICE sector can be better promoted, not only to Chinese visitors but also to other nations across the world," Tourism Deputy Minister for International Marketing I Gde Pitana said.

The tourism event of IT&CM was held annually since 2007. Some 640 exhibitors and 440 buyers from 56 countries and regions took part in the event last year.

Pitana said that Indonesian delegation would consist of 10 tourism-related operators, including state-run airlines of Garuda Indonesia.

Besides showcasing the nation's best MICE accommodations, Indonesian cultural performances and diverse of coffees from various regions across the country would also be showed in the event.

Indonesia's MICE tourism sector is well-accommodated in the nation's capital of Jakarta, Bali, Yogyakarta, Bandung, Surabaya, Medan and Lombok.

Citing the data released by International Congress & Convention Association (ICCA), Pitana said that a visitor in MICE tourism sector may generate significant earnings to the host areas as they spent seven times higher than regular visitor.

He added that through the upcoming IT&CM event, Indonesia aims to receive more visitors from China, the largest market to Indonesian tourism industry.

Indonesia welcomed 1.74 million Chinese visitors last year, or 21.27 per cent higher than a year earlier. That figure made Chinese visitors topped the rank of foreign visitors in Indonesia throughout last year.

Indonesia has set target to welcome 15 million foreign visitors this year in which 2.43 million of them were expected to be contributed by Chinese visitors.—Xinhua KAYIN State with an area of 11730.85 square miles is situated in the southeast of Myanmar. It shares border with Shan State and Kayah State to the north, Thailand to the east, Mon State and Taninthayi Region to the south and Bago Region and Mon State to the west.

Kayin State is constituted with four districts, seven townships, 11 towns, 84 wards, 376 village-tracts and 2097 villages. With a population of over 1.5 million, it is home to Kayin, Mon, Bamar and Pa-O national races.

Peace process

DKBA, KNU, KNU/KNLA-PC are all the national race armed groups in Kayin State that have signed ceasefire agreements of state level and nationwide ceasefire agreement-NCA with the government and are now on the right track of the internal peace process.

Since taking office on 31 March 2016, the Kayin State Government led by Daw Nan Khin Htwe Myint has been making all-out efforts in cooperation with national race armed groups who had already signed peace agreements to ensure peace and stability in the state, and as a result, they have been able to build mutual friendship and trust with the armed groups.

The Kayin State Government provided funds and other necessities for the national race armed groups who had returned to legal fold to ensure that the latter fully engage in agriculture and livestock breeding as livelihoods. In the meantime, it has granted permits to companies of national race organizations in implementing regional development undertakings, thereby resulting job opportunities for ethnic peace groups.

As peace and stability prevailed in the region, the Kayin State Government has established Laykekaw, a new satellite town, in Myawady Township with a view to accommodating those who were returning from refugee camps in Thailand and those who fled to the other country due to armed conflicts and returned home, and has been involving in development activities there.

As part of the activities, it had accepted 65 refugees out of those living in refugee camps in Thailand after coordinating with the Thai Government and the UNHCR, and resettled them at the respective regions they preferred and then provided them with necessary assistance for improvement of their socio-economic status.

Since the Kayin State Government was able to further strengthen friendly relations with ethnic armed groups through coordination and bring about peace in the region, National Level Political Dialogue for Ethnic Groups (Kayin) was successfully held in Hpa-an from 18 to 20 January 2017 with 600 representatives in accordance with terms and conditions of the NCA.

As peace and stability prevailed in the region, the Kayin State Government has established Laykekaw, a new satellite town, in Myawady Township.

Perspectives and opinions of the whole Kayin people on political, economic, social affairs, land and national resources as well as environmental conservation collected from National Level Political Dialogue for Ethnic Groups (Kayin) will be presented to the Union Peace Conference-21st Century Panglong.

In order to ensure smooth commodities flow in the border area of Myawady, Kayin State the construction of No. 2 Myanmar-Thai Friendship Bridge was started from the month of August 2015 near Yaypu village in Myawady township and the facility is expected to be completed in the month of March 2017. Upon the completion of the friendship bridge on the east-west economic corridor linking Myanmar-Thailand-Laos-Viet Nam, it will contribute a lot to better transportation and economic development of both Kayin State and the country.

The bridge project has inevitably something to do with the land grasp which is to be carried out in the national interest. To address the problem, the Kayin State Government formed the coordination committee for compensating the land to ensure that local people who suffered receive a compensatory payment for 146.95 acres of land and buildings demolished. A total of K 350 million was given already as compensation to local people.

Apart from that, the 45.45 Km long section of Myawady-Kawka-reik Asian Highway was able to be opened in the month of August 2015 and the Kawka-reik-Eindu section is being upgraded into a facility of international level. In the 2016-2017 fiscal year, the 11.6 Km long Eindu-Zarthabyin road was tarred and the project is now near completion.

In the time of the new Kayin State Government, the 500 feet long Anankwin Bridge on Thanphyu-zayat-Phayarthonsu Road was formally opened on 11-10-2016 with the attendance of the Chief Minister of Kayin State Government.

Furthermore, the Thehtama-naung Phayargyi roundabout and Mebaung roundabout in Hpa-an, the capital of the state, were demolished and traffic lights had been installed instead so that the people could move about in accord with the traffic rules and regulations, while the two miles and six furlongs long road section from Shweyinhmyaw Pagoda to Mebaung junction was upgraded into a tarred facility as part of projects on upgrading of downtown roads.

Japan to allow home-sharing services nationwide

TOKYO — The Cabinet on Friday endorsed a bill to allow property owners across Japan to offer vacant homes or rooms to tourists for up to 180 days per year by simply notifying municipalities, amid a shortage of hotels and inns to accommodate the surge in foreign travelers to Japan. The legislation, which the government hopes to see enacted during the current parliamentary session, aims to stave off complaints from neighbours about noise and other guest-related issues by placing so-called minpaku lodging operators under the supervision of municipal governments.

Japan changed regulations last April to allow individuals to provide holiday accommodation after obtaining permission. But in principle, such accommodation is not permitted in residential areas, with many hosts offering it without authorization.

The new law would allow hosts to rent out their homes or rooms in areas designated as exclusively residential. But concerns remain about the potential negative impact on the living environment in such areas and on the business of hotels and inns, which are not permitted to operate in such areas in principle. Besides requiring hosts to notify municipalities of their intent to offer home-sharing services, the new law would require them to clearly mark their buildings with signs, keep records of lodgers and clean the facilities periodically. The law would also call for hosts to respond to complaints from local residents and take measures to contain the noise guests may cause. In areas where it is feared living conditions could deteriorate once home-sharing services are permitted, municipalities would be allowed to shorten the 180-day maximum annual operating period. Intermediaries connecting tourists and hosts, such as online marketplace Airbnb, would be required to register with the Japan Tourism Agency. Operators violating the regulations could be ordered to suspend or terminate their businesses and may face prison terms of up to six months or fine of up to 1 million yen ($8,700) if they do not abide by such orders.

"By providing a variety of lodging services, we hope that foreign tourists in Japan can enjoy better comfort and convenience," Chief Cabinet Secretary Yoshihide Suga told a press conference, adding that creating regulations will help promote the wider use of home-sharing services.—Kyodo News

Gere delights Israeli fans at premier of Israel-US movie

LOS ANGELES — Hollywood actor Richard Gere delighted fans after walking the red carpet in Jerusalem for the Israeli premiere of his new film “Norman: The Moderate Rise and Tragic Fall Of A New York Fixer”.

The “Pretty Woman” star plays Norman Oppenheimer, a veteran “fixer” in New York’s Jewish community who runs into trouble when he tries to win over a visiting Israeli politician, played by Israeli actor Lior Ashkenazi.

In the film, screened at Jerusalem’s Cinematheque on Wednesday, Gere’s character’s life changes when he buys an expensive pair of shoes for an Israeli dignitary who eventually becomes prime minister.

Critics have said the storyline is reminiscent of the connection between former Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert, and a New York-based businessman alleged to have given him cash envelopes. Olmert is currently serving jail time for corruption.

Israeli-American writer-director Joseph Cedar said he felt compelled to explore the life of a “fixer” — someone who thrives on connecting with people and getting in with the right crowd — from his own personal life experience.

“It took him (Gere) some time to feel comfortable with a different body language, a story line that I don’t think he’s ever had to bring to the screen, and gradually he felt more and more comfortable until he really became this character,” Cedar told reporters at a news conference on Thursday.

Gere said he was not getting involved in the politics of the region and the challenge for him was portraying an unusual personality.

“I am not interested in politics, I am interested in human beings. The people that I am meeting are also people who are primarily involved with relationships and bridging the problems between human beings... I am coming from a country that is in deep anxiety and chaos right now,” the American actor and humanitarian activist said.—Reuters

Noble, sympathetic Kong reimaged for ‘Kong: Skull Island’

LOS ANGELES — King Kong is back again — not climbing the Empire State Building clutching a distressed damsel in his colossal clutches, but as the mighty protector of a remote island in the 1970s.

“Kong: Skull Island” opens in movie theaters worldwide this week as the 8th installment of the screen classic. It depicts a group of explorers and Vietnam-era soldiers on a secret mission to an unexplored Pacific Ocean island that turns out to be the home of Kong and other man-eating creatures.

The new movie, starring British actor Tom Hiddleston as a renegade adventurer and Oscar-winner Brie Larson as an anti-war photographer, is a far cry from the original 1933 version.

But Hiddleston says the story retains its enduring appeal.

“He (Kong) represents the power of nature and its capacity to inspire wonder and terror that’s both somehow noble and majestic, but also it can be destructive and scary,” Hiddleston told Reuters Television.

In the new film, Hiddleston said “there’s something very sympathetic about him.”

“Kong is often always minding his own business doing his own thing until the balance of his life is interrupted by mankind.

And it’s as if he’s a metaphor for the way human beings disturb the balance of nature,” the actor said.

Director Jordan Vogt-Roberts said he felt the pressure of reimagining the King Kong story “every second of the day.”

“You’re playing with an icon of cinema and you’re playing with pop culture,” he said.

“There’s been so many retellings of the story. So to break away from that, to not tell the beauty and the beast story, to not tell the same Kong story that we’ve seen over and over again and to do something new with it - that’s an incredible amount of freedom and yet it’s a very scary thing,” he added.

Special effects bring Kong to life not just as an anatomically correct ape but “a capital-M movie monster who stands on two feet (and) carries himself with a nobility like a god,” said Vogt-Roberts.—Reuters

War comes to Westeros as ‘Game of Thrones’ unveils July return

LOS ANGELES — The premiere date of HBO’s medieval fantasy series “Game of Thrones” was announced with fiery fanfare on Thursday, as a block of ice was melted live online to reveal the 16 July start of the new season.

More than 100,000 people watched the hour-long Facebook Live stream of a block of ice being melted slowly by blasts of fire. It was interrupted by a few technical difficulties when the stream cut to black.

The highly anticipated seventh season of “Game of Thrones,” tagged “The Great War is Here,” has been moved to summer from its usual spring air date this year as filming of the show was delayed to capture scenes of winter for the show’s fictional realm of Westeros.

Emmy-winning “Game of Thrones,” based on George R.R. Martin’s “A Song of Ice and Fire” books, follows the epic fantasy of a multi-generational struggle for control of the Iron Throne seat of the Seven Kingdoms.

A teaser trailer released by HBO on Thursday shows the crests of the warring families crumbling to ash, with voices of key characters heard speaking phrases from past seasons in a timeline of events that have led to the battle. At the very end, the voice of resurrected Night Watch leader Jon Snow says, “The same thing coming for all of us. There’s only one war that matters. The great war. And it is here.”

“Game of Thrones” is the most-watched show on Time Warner Inc’s premium cable network HBO, averaging around 25 million viewers for its sixth season. The saga will conclude with its eighth season next year.—Reuters

Trump-Clinton election campaign to get HBO miniseries treatment

LOS ANGELES — Cable channel HBO said on Thursday it is planning a dramatized TV miniseries about the extraordinary 2016 US presidential, one of the first of several such projects being discussed in Hollywood.

No casting, title or broadcast date was announced for the HBO project, which comes from the same team that produced the award-winning “Game Change” film about the 2008 election that starred Julianne Moore as then Republican vice-presidential contender Sarah Palin.

The 2016 election campaign that saw Republican Donald Trump triumph over Democrat Hillary Clinton last November was one of the most dramatic in living memory.

miniseries treatment being developed by “Zero Dark Thirty” movie screenwriter Mark Boal, the Hollywood Reporter said in February.

A third miniseries project, looking at the behind-the-scenes drama of Trump’s campaign, is also making the rounds in Hollywood, entertainment website Deadline reported last month.

The announcement by HBO, a unit of Time Warner, appeared to mark the first of the various ideas to win a commitment from a major broadcaster.

HBO said its series would be based on an upcoming book by political journalists Mark Halperin and John Heilemann about the campaign. Jay Roach, who directed Emmy-winner “Game Change” will return to direct, and Tom Hanks is one of the executive producers.

Len Amato, president of HBO Films, said in a statement that the project “promises to vividly capture the most unique and impactful event in modern American politics.”—Reuters

Turkey hopes discounts, fuel subsidies can reverse 30 per cent tourism plunge

BERLIN — Turkey expressed hopes on Friday for a revival of its tourism industry after security concerns caused a 30 per cent drop in foreign visitors and revenues last year.

“We are seeing some very positive signals. That gives us hope,” Turkish Culture and Tourism Minister Nabi Avci said at ITB Berlin, the world’s biggest tourism fair, on Thursday.

The number of foreign visitors to Turkey fell to 25.4 million in 2016, the lowest in nine years, after a spate of bombings and a failed coup discouraged tourists.

Bookings from Germany, the source of around 15 per cent of Turkey’s tourists, are also suffering as security worries are exacerbated by rising tensions over Turkish political rallies in Germany and the detention of a Turkish-German journalist in Istanbul.

Foreign Minister Mev-

lut Cavusoglu unexpectedly stopped by ITB on Wednesday and lobbied for German tourists to return.

“There is no reason for our German friends to be afraid to come to Turkey. Turkey is as safe as Germany,” he said.

Hotels in Turkey on average filled only 53 per cent of rooms last year, and many have slashed prices.

Palm World Resort & Spa, a 620-bed hotel near the seaside town of Side, is offering rooms at a discount of 35-40 per cent, after a 50 per cent price cut last year, owner Mehmet Surucuoglu told Reuters at ITB.

So far, though, only 25 per cent of its rooms have been booked for the summer season.

“It is better to have some people coming at lower prices than to have an empty hotel,” said Surucuoglu, who relies on Germany for 90 per cent of his guests.

The government is trying to prop up the travel sector — which contributes about $30 billion to the economy in a usual year — by expanding fuel subsidies for airlines and helping hotels obtain loans, Avci, the tourism minister, said.

Fuel subsidies of $6,000 per flight carrying up to 200 passengers are now available for scheduled flights as well as charter carriers, and the number of eligible airports has been increased to 14 from five, he said.

Still, Thomas Cook’s Condor has cut capacity to Turkey by 10 per cent this summer, after a 30 per cent drop in passenger numbers last year, Chief Executive Ralf Teckentrup told Reuters at ITB.

Kayihan Suer, sales manager at Peninsula Tours, said his company had managed to keep occupancy rates over 80 per cent in eight of its 12 hotels by bringing in guests from many different countries, making it less reliant on any one market.

“We’ve been doing business for 35 years, we’ve made mistakes and learned our lessons. Now we have over 20 different nationalities in our hotels,” he said, adding that there was strong interest from Romanian and Bulgarian tour operators.

Murat Sak, who manages the Venosa hotel near Bodrum, said the proportion of Turkish guests had risen since last year and was now at 40 per cent, helped along by discounts for early bookings.—Reuters

TV may take biggest toll on school readiness for poor kids

NEW YORK — Doctors often tell parents of young children to limit television time because it can interfere with learning and language development. Now, a US study suggests TV’s impact on school readiness might be worse for poor kids than for more affluent children.

Researchers examined test results for 807 kids between 5 and 6 years old assessed at the start of kindergarten for basic skills like counting, letter recognition and sorting blocks by pattern and shape. They also looked at parent surveys about how much time each day kids spent watching traditional television sets or other screens.

For kids at the highest income levels, there wasn’t any connection between the amount of TV children watched and how well they did on the tests. More television time was tied to just a modest drop in test results for students from average income households — about $74,000 a year for a family of four.

Children at or near the poverty line, about $21,200 a year for a family of four, had a pronounced drop in test scores when they watched a lot of TV each day.

“Watching too much TV — here more than 2 hours per day — was negatively associated with the development of mathematical abilities and executive function — skills engaged in the pursuit of goals, including inhibition, attention, working memory, and cognitive flexibility,” said lead study author Andrew Ribner, a psychology and education researcher at New York University.

“We find some evidence that the negative association of television viewing with math ability is at least partially through executive function, which others have shown is strongly related to math ability throughout the academic life span,” Ribner added by email.

Last year, the American Academy of Pediatrics recommended that preschoolers watch no more than an hour of TV a day; down from two hours in 2001 guidelines.

Parents should watch with kids and show them only “high quality” programming like Sesame Workshop and PBS, the AAP recommends.

It’s possible that some of the differences in how much television time influences school readiness for rich versus poor kids in the study might be explained by the type of content children watch, Ribner said.—Reuters

Colossus probably depicting Ramses II found in Egypt

CAIRO — Archaeologists from Egypt and Germany have found a massive eight-metre statue submerged in ground water in a Cairo slum that they say probably depicts revered Pharaoh Ramses II, who ruled Egypt more than 3,000 years ago.

The discovery, hailed by the Antiquities Ministry as one of the most important ever, was made near the ruins of Ramses II’s temple in the ancient city of Heliopolis, located in the eastern part of modern-day Cairo.

“Last Tuesday they called me to announce the big discovery of a colossus of a king, most probably Ramses II, made out of quartzite,” Antiquities Minister Khaled al-Anani told Reuters on Thursday at the site of the statue’s unveiling.

The most powerful and celebrated ruler of ancient Egypt, the pharaoh also known as Ramses the Great was the third of the Nineteenth Dynasty of Egypt and ruled from 1279 to 1213 BCE.

He led several military expeditions and expanded the Egyptian Empire to stretch from Syria in the east to Nubia in the south. His successors called him the “Great Ancestor”.

“We found the bust of the statue and the lower part of the head and now we removed the head and we found the crown and the right ear and a fragment of the right eye,” Anani said.

On Thursday, archaeologists, officials, local residents, and members of the news media looked on as a massive forklift pulled the statue’s head out of the water.

The joint Egyptian-German expedition also found the upper part of a life-sized limestone statue of Pharaoh Seti II, Ramses II’s grandson, that is 80 centimetres long.

The sun temple in Heliopolis was founded by Ramses II, lending weight to the likelihood the statue is of him, archaeologists say.

It was one of the largest temples in Egypt, almost double the size of Luxor’s Karnak, but was destroyed in Greco-Roman times. Many of its obelisks were moved to Alexandria or to Europe and stones from the site were looted and used for building as Cairo developed.

Experts will now attempt to extract the remaining pieces of both statues before restoring them. If they are successful and the colossus is proven to depict Ramses II, it will be moved to the entrance of the Grand Egyptian Museum, set to open in 2018.—Reuters

United earn draw at Rostov, Lyon beat Roma 4-2

ZURICH — Europa League favourites Manchester United secured a 1-1 draw on a threadbare pitch at Rostov, while Olympique Lyonnais beat AS Roma 4-2 helped by a fine individual goal from Nabil Fekir in their last 16, first leg ties on Thursday.

Racing Genk won 5-2 at Gent in an all-Belgian clash and German rivals Schalke 04 and Borussia Moenchengladbach drew 1-1 in a meeting of former UEFA Cup winners.

United's Henrikh Mkhitaryan gave the Premier League team a 35th minute lead in Russia, turning the ball in from close range after some nifty footwork by Zlatan Ibrahimovic.

But Rostov, who beat Bayern Munich on the same ground in November on their way to a third-place finish in their Champions League group, levelled eight minutes after the restart.

Alexander Bukharov volleyed past Sergio Romero for a superbly-taken goal after chesting down a long ball over the United defence from Timofei Kalachev.

Both sides struggled on a divot-strewn surface that had been heavily criticised by United manager Jose Mourinho and dust was getting into the players's towards the end of the game.

"It was impossible to play better, impossible to play a passing game," said Mourinho.

"I remember as a kid some matches like this in Portugal - non-league and amateur pitches. To see my players coping with it and the humility to fight for every ball is a good feeling for me."

Mohamed Salah and Federico Fazio gave Roma a 2-1 half-time lead at Lyon but the hosts hit back in style after the break.

Lyon, who had taken an eighth-minute lead thanks to Mouctar Diakhaby, levelled two minutes after the break through Corentin Tolisso helped by Alexandre Lacazette's clever reverse pass.

Fekir put the hosts ahead in the 74th, three minutes after coming on, when he skipped past three defenders in the penalty area, moved the ball to his left foot and curled a shot past Roma's Brazilian goalkeeper Alisson.

Lacazette completed the scoring with an emphatic volley in added time.

Gladbach's Jonas Hofmann gave them a 15th minute lead at Schalke, latching on to a sublime through ball by Lars Stindl to beat Ralf Faehrmann from close range, before Guido Burgstaller replied 10 minutes later for the Royal Blues.

Mbwana Samatta led the charge for Genk, scoring two of their five goals at Gent. Jeremy Perbet missed a penalty for the hosts at 4-2 down before they had Anderson Esiiti sent off late on.

Olympiakos Piraeus's ex-Argentina midfielder Esteban Cambiasso gave them a first-half lead over Besiktas but Vincent Aboubakar replied to earn the Turkish side a 1-1 draw in Athens.

Claudio Beauvue's 90th minute goal gave Celta Vigo a 2-1 win at home to Russia's Krasnodar, FC Copenhagen's Andreas Cornelius headed in on the hour to secure a 2-1 home victory against former European champions Ajax Amsterdam and Anderlecht won 1-0 at APOEL Nicosia with a first-half goal from Nicolae Stanciu.—Reuters

Hart believes he is 'surplus to requirements' at Man City

TURIN, (Italy) — Joe Hart is not expecting a return to the Premier League after his loan spell at Torino with the England goalkeeper believing he is "surplus to requirements" at parent club Manchester City.

Hart, who joined the Italian side on a season-long loan after realising he would not be first choice under new City boss Pep Guardiola, feels it is far more important to play for a club that wants him to be their goalkeeper.

"I'd say I'm pretty much surplus to requirements at my parent club at the moment and I don't see that changing," the 29-year-old told the BBC. "I love the Premier League... I know it really well but I wouldn't say it was top of my wish list." Guardiola signed Claudio Bravo from Barcelona at the start of the season with Willy Caballero already on the books. Hart said he respected the manager's decision to replace him.

"He didn't do it to ruin my life, he did it because he thought that was what was right for him to win as a manager," Hart added. "To get results he needed to have a team he felt comfortable with and a team he wanted.—Reuters

US must allow access if it bids for 2026 soccer World Cup: FIFA

LONDON — The United States would have to grant entry to players, officials and fans from any country that qualified if it won the right to host the 2026 World Cup finals, soccer body FIFA said on Thursday.

Responding to a question about President Donald Trump's order banning citizens from six Muslim-majority nations from traveling to the United States, FIFA boss Gianni Infantino said any nation bidding for the tournament would have clear rules.

"We are now in the process of defining the bid requirements," he said.

"In the world there are certainly many countries with travel bans, visa requirements and so on and so forth.

"What is obvious is that when it comes to the World Cup, like the Olympic Games ... any team, including the supporters and officials of that team who have qualified, need to have access to the country. Otherwise there is no World Cup."

CONCACAF, the governing body for soccer in North and Central America and the Caribbean, is mulling a three-way joint bid for the 2026 World Cup between the United States, Mexico and Canada.

FIFA has ruled out a bid from Europe or Asia, leaving the CONCACAF region as frontrunner for a tournament set to expand to 48 nations from 32.

The United States last hosted the World Cup in 1994 and Mexico in 1986.

Los Angeles is also bidding against Paris for the 2024 Summer Olympics with a vote on that due in September.

Victor Montagliani, the CONCACAF president, said last month that a wall planned by Trump along the US-Mexico border would not present an obstacle to co-hosting the event.

Regional soccer officials have, however, been tight-lipped about the executive order.

The head of European soccer body UEFA warned last month that restrictions could damage any US bid.

"It will be part of the evaluation, and I am sure it will not help the United States to get the World Cup," UEFA president Aleksander Ceferin told the New York Times.

"If players cannot come because of political decisions, or populist decisions, then the World Cup cannot be played there."

Iran, one of the six countries named, have played in three World Cups including the 2014 finals in Brazil while Syria beat China last October in a qualifier.

"The requirements will be clear. Then each country can make up their decision whether they want to bid or not," said Infantino. "It's nothing to do with the US or not the US, it's a general sporting criteria."—Reuters
