Kofi Annan condemned the violence yesterday, saying “no cause can justify such brutality and senseless killing”.

The Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA), a group previously known as Harakah al-Yaqin, which instigated the October attacks, claimed responsibility for the early morning offensive, and warned of more, Reuters reported.

The extremist terrorists began the coordinated attacks by throwing an improvised explosive device (IED) into a police station in the district at 1am, officials said.

The sustained, planned terrorist attacks drew quick rebuke from western countries.

“We condemn the attacks that took place overnight against the security forces, and we offer condolences to victims and their families”, a statement from the U.S. Embassy in Yangon said. “We recognise the government and security forces have the responsibility to act to apprehend the perpetrators and prevent further violence, and we urge them to do so in a way that protects all innocent civilians”.

A statement from the British Embassy in Yangon similarly denounced the attacks.

State Counsellor's statement on attacks in Rakhine State

(25th August, 2017)

We strongly condemn the violent attacks by the terrorists on the security forces in Rakhine State.

We praise and honour the police and members of the security forces who are bravely and gallantly performing their duties while facing many challenges there. We stand by those police men and members of security forces who sacrificed their lives for the country and their bereaved families and their colleagues. We offer our condolences and sympathies to the victims and their families.

As the Union Government has foreseen the possibility of such attacks to coincide with the release of the final report of the Advisory Commission on Rakhine State, instructions have been given to the Union ministers concerned.

It is clear that today's attacks are systematically planned and are intended to cripple the efforts for peace, stability and co-existence of the local communities. Our determined efforts would not waver in any way due to atrocious acts of brutality of extremist terrorists.

The Union Government has been committed to find effective solutions regarding the issues in the Rakhine State through pragmatic and durable methods. We also welcome the constructive approaches of the final report of the Advisory Commission on Rakhine State which was issued yesterday.

We also welcome the statement of Mr. Kofi Annan, the chair of the Advisory Commission on Rakhine State, condemning today's attacks. ■ (Unofficial Translation)

Japan to conduct missile interceptor drills at US bases

TOKYO — Japan will conduct missile interceptor drills at US military bases in the country next week and in September amid growing threats from North Korea, Defence Minister Itsunori Onodera said Friday.

The Air Self-Defence Force will practice deploying Patriot Advanced Capability-3 missile interceptors at the US Yokota Air Base in a Tokyo suburb and Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni in Yamaguchi Prefecture on Tuesday as well as at the Misawa Air Base in Aomori Prefecture on 7 September.

It will be the first time for Japan to conduct such training at US bases, according to the Defense Ministry.

North Korea has threatened to fire ballistic missiles across the Japanese mainland toward the US Pacific territory of Guam, which followed its test-firing of two intercontinental ballistic missiles in July.

The drills "will contribute to further strengthening the Japan-US alliance," Onodera said at a press conference. The ministry has deployed ASDF PAC-3 missile interceptors in parts of western Japan, which North Korea said its missile would fly over.—Kyodo News ■

Japan says to impose additional sanctions against North Korea

TOKYO — Japan will impose additional sanctions against North Korea following the reclusive country's repeated missile launches and unresolved abduction issue, its top government spokesman said on Friday.

Chief Cabinet Secretary Yoshihide Suga told reporters that Japan would freeze the assets of six more organisations and two more individuals linked to North Korea. He said they included four Chinese entities and one Chinese individual and two Namibian entities.

In Beijing, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying expressed "strong dissatisfaction and resolute opposition" to the Japanese sanctions.

The United States on Tuesday imposed new North Korea-related sanctions, targeting Chinese and Russian firms and individuals for supporting Pyongyang's weapons programmes, including a Namibia-based subsidiary of a Chinese company and a North Korean entity operating in Namibia.

Asked what message Japan was sending with the additional sanctions, Suga said it was important to observe the UNSC resolutions.

"It is extremely important to exert pressure in this form while acting in concert with the United States and South Korea," he said.

North Korean leader Kim Jong Un has ordered more solid-fuel rocket engines, state media reported on Wednesday, as he pursues nuclear and missile programmes amid a standoff with Washington.

Responding to Japan's latest steps, China's Foreign Ministry spokeswoman said Beijing opposed any unilateral sanctions outside the United Nations Security Council framework, especially those targeting Chinese entities and people.

Japan's actions "gravely harm China's interests and judicial sovereignty, and create new political obstacles to improving China-Japan relations", Hua told a daily news briefing.

"China demands that Japan immediately ceases with the relevant mistaken methods. If Japan remains obstinately on this course, it must bear the consequences."

China has signed up for increasingly tough UN sanctions against North Korea, and promised to fully and effectively enforce them.

But China has been angered by unilateral sanctions placed against Chinese companies and individuals by the United States in particular, saying only China has the right to target those in the country who may illegally be aiding Pyongyang.—Reuters ■

Singapore picks Japan as 1st stop to promote new branding

SINGAPORE — Singapore on Thursday unveiled a new unified branding for its national tourism and investment agencies and chose Japan as the first stop for its global marketing campaign.

S. Iswaran, Singapore's minister for trade and industry, launched the new slogan, "Passion Made Possible," that will be shared by the Singapore Tourism Board and the Singapore Economics Development Board to market Singapore internationally for tourism and business purposes.

The move aims to "help Singapore stand out on the international stage" amid fierce global competition to attract tourists and investments.

The slogan was designed to convey "Singapore's attitude and mindset: a passion-driven, never-settling spirit of determination and enterprise that constantly pursues possibilities and reinvention."

Lionel Yeo, chief executive of the Singapore Tourism Board, said in his speech at the launch event in Singapore that, "The Singapore story is about Passion Made Possible."

"By implementing practical solutions for ourselves and overcoming tough odds, we have been an inspiration to others," he said.

He said the brand will be adopted by a few other agencies within the Ministry of Trade and industry.

US Navy recovers second body in search for sailors missing after collision

SINGAPORE — US Navy and Marine Corps divers have recovered and identified a second body in the search for ten sailors missing after a collision between a guided-missile destroyer and merchant vessel near Singapore earlier this week, the US Navy said on Friday.

The USS John S. McCain collided with the merchant tanker in waters near Singapore and Malaysia on Monday, which led to an international search-and-rescue operation for the missing sailors. The navy recovered the first body from inside the hull of the warship earlier this week.

"More divers and equipment arrived overnight to continue search and recovery operations for eight missing sailors inside flooded compartments of the ship," the US Seventh Fleet said in statement on its website.

On Thursday, the US Navy suspended the wider search and rescue operation to focus recovery efforts on the damaged hull of the ship, which is moored at Singapore's Changi Naval Base.

Efforts for stability in Rakhine will not be slowed by terrorist atrocities

AS terrorism increases around the world, extremists in Rakhine State, which is often called the western door of Myanmar, make their reprehensible objectives more obvious as time goes by.

These extremist terrorist groups have kidnapped, tortured and killed peaceful civilians, people who they perceive are collaborating with the government and people who have agreed to interviews with media agencies in their attempt to prevent news from reaching the outside world.

These groups target ethnic minorities living near forests, farms and streams and kill them to scare them away from their homes and eventually take over these areas. Most of these extremist terrorists use religious ideals to gather followers and create unrest. They also are known to give training in making explosives, marksmanship and unarmed combat. It is believed that their operations in the Mayu mountains, which includes setting up terrorist camps and collecting rations and aid may be an attempt to make Maungtaw their base of operations.

In the early morning hours yesterday, these terrorists staged a series of coordinated attacks on police outposts, killing policemen, civil servants and security forces.

We strongly condemn the violent attacks by the insurgents on the security forces in Rakhine State.

It is clear that yesterday's attacks were systematically planned and are intended to cripple the efforts for peace, stability and co-existence of local people.

Our determined efforts for bringing peace, stability and development to the western part of the country will not be slowed down due to atrocious acts of brutality by extremist terrorists.

We praise the police and members of the security forces who are bravely doing their duty while facing potentially deadly challenges in Rakhine State.

We stand by the fallen policemen and security members who sacrificed their lives for their country, and offer condolences to their bereaved families and colleagues.—The Global New Light of Myanmar ■

Fishery exports and Least Developed Countries

ANEW UNCTAD study examines the development potential of the fishery sector in selected Least Developed Countries in Africa and Asia, providing policy recommendations to overcome challenges on both the supply and demand sides.

Fish is one of the world's most traded food commodities and, with the global population growing to an expected 9.7 billion people by 2050, demand for fish also expected to increase. That offers valuable trade opportunities. In addition to human consumption, industrial need for fishery resources is projected to rise in the coming decades due to growing demand for fish oil and animal feed.

Wild catch alone will not sustain the increase in demand for fish. There should be deliberate actions by Least Developed Countries (LDCs) to enhance aquaculture development so as to meet the increase.

The UNCTAD study documents that, over the last three decades, global aquaculture production has tripled, growing at an average annual rate of 8.3 per cent. In 2014, aquaculture constituted 46 per cent of world fish production compared to 26 per cent in 1994.

Fishing, both coastal and inland, holds significant potential for socio-economic development for a number of LDCs. Many have comparative advantages in fishery resources due to a combination of low-cost labour and waters rich in highly-prized varieties of fish.

The social, economic and environmental benefits of the fishery sector are substantial. In addition to creating employment and increasing foreign exchange earnings, fishing provides a major source of protein in many LDCs and is important for improving food security. The study urges governments and stakeholders in LDCs to view the fishery sector as a key driver in enabling the countries to meet the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs).

The fisheries sector is also a viable alternative to manufacturing as a source of export-led growth. Developing countries as a whole have substantially increased their share in world fishery exports, from 34.6 per cent in 1981 to 50.2 per cent in 2013. However, despite their ample fish stocks, not many LDCs have been able to follow suit, and their share in global fish exports has only risen marginally, from 1.6 to 3.5 per cent in the same period. The work of UNCTAD reveals that the fishery sector in LDCs remains predominantly traditional or artisanal.

In its research, UNCTAD presents case studies of six of the world's 47 LDCs — Bangladesh, Cambodia, the Comoros, Mozambique, Myanmar and Uganda — and identifies a series of supply-side and demand-side challenges undermining the role of their fishery sectors.

On the supply side, the main challenges are deficient transportation and storage facilities; poor energy infrastructure and high electricity costs; a lack of investment, finance or credit for small operators; overfishing and depletion of fish resources; water pollution; and a lack of common fishery policies among countries that share water resources.

On the demand side, LDC fish products face few or no tariff barriers in developed country markets. However, the biggest non-tariff trade barrier for producers and processors from LDCs are the stringent quality and safety standards systems imposed on fish products in major overseas markets, instituted in the 1990s and 2000s.

The study argues that stringent public safety norms are often compounded by further cumbersome private quality and safety standards. The confluences of public and private standards have effectively restricted access to major importing markets for many LDC fishery exporters.

This is mainly due to the fact that standards are not harmonized and are costly for LDCs to meet. It is also due to structural problems in LDCs, including in processing facilities and procurement methods, as well as a lack of testing and certification of products throughout the value chain.

The study provides policy conclusions and recommendations aimed at helping LDCs to realize the full development potential of their fisheries sectors, including the provision of infrastructure, the improvement of regulatory and institutional capacities, monitoring and regulation of domestic fishing, and the harmonization of international standards.

The study is the result of the implementation of the Development Account Project titled: "Building the capacities of selected LDCs to upgrade and diversify their fish exports". The project has been implemented in Cambodia, Comoros, Mozambique, Myanmar and Uganda.—United Nations Conference on Trade and Development ■

Global leaders commit to eradicating modern slavery

SYDNEY — Global business tycoons and politicians from 48 countries committed to ending human trafficking, forced labour and modern slavery on Friday at a landmark gathering of high-profile leaders in the Australian city of Perth.

The forum, launched last year to expand public-private partnership to eradicate these crimes, saw participation from the heads of US retail giant Wal-Mart Stores Inc, Japan's Mitsui and China's JD.com, among others.

"It's about accepting standard for good labour practices throughout the supply chain," said Indonesian Foreign Minister Retno Marsudi.

The forum is also working to raise awareness on ethical business practices and establishing a "spatial mechanism" to ensure immediate identification, processing and assistance for victims of human trafficking, Marsudi added.

"I propose that during the next Bali meeting next year, the industries, the private sector, will be able to showcase the best practices that have been taken by industries on initiatives resulted from this forum," Mar-sudi said.

While the forum made general commitments it fell short of concrete action plans.

The Global Slavery Index estimates that 45 million people around the world are victims of modern slavery. It is estimated that two-thirds of these people were from the Indo-Pacific region.

"It is true that business and government, if we come together for the first time, have the power to end it. This has never been done before," said Andrew Forrest, chairman of Australia's Fortescue Metals Group and a co-chair of Friday's forum.

Forrest urged governments across the Indo-Pacific region to adopt a Modern Slavery Act as a mean to tackle the problem.

Australia has instigated two parliamentary inquiries into the adoption of a Modern Slavery Act and the government is waiting for the reports, said Foreign Minister Julie Bishop.

Bishop said the Australian government is looking to introduce the legislation "as soon as possible" but did not put a specific date on it. The laws will be inspired by the UK's Modern Slavery Act 2015. —Reuters ■

Divisions bubble up as Brexit talks resume

BRUSSELS — Divisions between Britain and the EU over mapping out their divorce will be laid bare in Brussels next week when the two sides meet for another round of negotiations whose timetable already looks tight.

London is keen to focus on what happens after Brexit but the bloc says more ground must first be covered on settling the terms of the departure, including the bill, leaving dozens of officials to pick their way through a diplomatic minefield from Monday to Thursday.

The 27 remaining EU states are also insisting on seeing progress on safeguarding expatriate rights and sorting out the future Irish border before they can declare the "sufficient progress" that would allow them to broach talks about Britain's future relationship with the EU.

Time is short in the negotiations, which started in June and should conclude before the expected Brexit date in late March 2019. Otherwise Britain risks leaving the EU with little clarity over what happens next.

"There are no major expectations as regards next week's round. The documents published by Britain (this week) refer more to the future relationship than the things to settle in the first place," an EU diplomat said.

"Many matters, including the financial aspect most importantly, remain unclear from the British side. So the EU expects no big progress, which makes any 'significant progress' less likely in October."

Talks have been slowed by an ill-judged snap election called by Prime Minister Theresa May that weakened her governing Conservative Party and exposed rifts among her ministers over what sort of Brexit they would seek.

Several position papers released this week have made clear London will often look to replicate as closely as possible its existing arrangements as an EU member after it leaves.

But the EU has dug in its heels, saying it wants to get much more on the three priority areas before anything else.

"We won't be talking about the future during this round, nothing about customs arrangements or some such," an EU official said. "We need detail, the withdrawal deal ...has to be a legal text."

One key point of contention is London's desire, reaffirmed this week, to break free from the jurisdiction of the EU's top court, the European Court of Justice (ECJ). For the EU ensuring the ECJ can police the withdrawal agreement and continue to have the final say in disputes involving EU citizens residing in Britain - and vice versa - is essential.

The bloc largely brushed what May called an initial "generous offer" on citizens' rights, saying much more detailed legal assurances were necessary.

While there is some common ground, sources on both sides say more technical work is needed. —Reuters ■

US fighter pilots in Afghanistan prepare for more air strikes

BAGRAM AIRFIELD, (Afghanistan) — For the fighter pilots at the largest US military base in Afghanistan, President Donald Trump's new strategy for the war should mean escalating an already surging air campaign, and possibly including an unrestrained offensive against the Taliban.

The number of US air strikes in Afghanistan has already dramatically spiked since Trump took office in January, from 1,074 in all of last year to 2,244 as of 20 August this year.

After a months-long review of his Afghanistan policy, Trump committed the United States last week to an open-ended conflict in the country and promised a stepped-up campaign against the Taliban insurgents.

Few details have emerged, but the pilots in Bagram are preparing for the possibility they'll be taking the fight to the Taliban in a way they haven't since the US-led "combat mission" in Afghanistan was called off at the end of 2014.

Among their targets since then have been Islamic State militants, who are also active in the country.

"Between the two groups, the Taliban are definitely smarter," F-16 pilot Maj. Daniel Lindsey told Reuters. "The Taliban are much harder to kill."

While Islamic State has launched a series of deadly attacks around the country, it has nowhere near the influence, reach, and community ties that the Taliban has.

It's those factors that pilots say make the Taliban a more challenging target, and one that has outlasted years of heavy bombardment.

"The Taliban is often embedded in the community, but nobody likes the Islamic State, so they are often separate," Lindsey said.

In many ways, Trump's policy is less a new plan than the continuation of a slow slide back into combat for American troops, although officials are quick to say their mission will remain focused on training and advising Afghan forces.

On Thursday, the commander of US troops in Afghanistan, Gen. John Nicholson, confirmed that his forces would increase air support for Afghan troops.

"We know the enemy fears air power," he told reporters in Kabul.

White House officials have said that rolling back territorial gains by the Taliban will be one of the key objectives of the new strategy.

For a time after former president Barack Obama declared America's combat mission over in Afghanistan at the end of 2014, US forces were restricted from attacking the Taliban in most circumstances except self-defence.

As the group expanded its hold in Afghanistan, however, Obama began to loosen some of those rules and Trump has gone further in sending US troops back into battle with their old adversaries.

Asked about the recent effects of US air strikes, Taliban spokesman Zabihullah Mujahid said the group's fighters had become used to dodging American bombs.

"In 2010, 2011 and 2012 the US air strikes were successful and we lost many Mujahedeen," he told Reuters. "But now we have enough experience to avoid casualties during their strikes by hiding in mountain holes and other places."

Still, forcing the Taliban to hide and preventing them from massing fighters has in some cases been credited with helping Afghan security forces hold on to some cities and blunt Taliban offensives.

Trump also announced that he would "lift restrictions and expand authorities in the field," but it remains unclear exactly what that would entail.

A US military spokesman in Kabul, Capt. William Salvin, said US forces are still limited to conducting air strikes in three broad circumstances: self-defence, counter-terrorism strikes against specific groups, and helping Afghan troops achieve

"strategic effects."

He declined to say whether those parameters might change.

The US military does not publicise its rules of engagement, but Lindsey said compared to when he was a fighter pilot at the height of the troop surge in Iraq in 2007, the so-called "ROE" in Afghanistan were less restrictive.

"Some guys can complain about it, but most I know don't seem to have any problem finding Islamic State or Taliban to kill," he said. "If you use the rules smartly, you'll get the bad guys."

The surge in air strikes has led the US Air Force units at Bagram to increase their maintenance and intelligence efforts, said F-16 pilot Maj. Abraham Lehman.

Officials say ramping up the number of strikes further would require the deployment of more support staff as well as additional specialised troops on the ground to coordinate the strikes.

While he said he had no information on new plans to deploy additional aircraft, Lehman said it "made sense" to increase air support as the Pentagon sends thousands more troops to the country.

"What we do is always a joint effort between us and the ground troops," Lehman said.—Reuters ■

Warplanes hit Yemen capital, casualties include children

DUBAI — An air strike on Yemen's capital Sanaa killed 12 people including six children on Friday, rescuers said.

The attack on the Faj Attan area on the outskirts of the city also severely damaged at least two buildings, reducing much of them to rubble, they said.

Residents and rescuers dug through debris to retrieve the bloodied, dust-covered bodies of several children, who appeared aged under 10 years old.

People at the scene told Reuters The warplanes were believed to be from a Saudi-led Arab coalition waging a 2-1/2-year-old campaign against the Iran-aligned Houthi movement for control of the country in a war which has killed at least 10,000 people.

The Houthis and their ally, former president Ali Abdullah Saleh, control much of the north of the country, including Sanaa. Yemen's internationally-recognised government is backed by the Saudi-led military alliance and is based in the south.

The United Nations human rights office called on Friday for an independent investigation into air strikes by the Saudi-led coalition on a hotel near Sanaa on Wednesday that killed more than 30 people, as well as civilians in two other hits.—Reuters

Japan, China, S Korea agree to join hands to combat fire ant woes

SUWON, (South Korea) — The environment ministers of Japan, China and South Korea agreed Friday to cooperate in addressing the growing problem of venomous fire ants, which have recently been found in containers shipped from overseas.

Wrapping up their two-day meeting in Suwon, south of Seoul, the ministers adopted a joint statement saying they will share information on the "current status of invasive alien species" as well as the "best practices of the countermeasures" in dealing with such species.

The trilateral meeting came at a time when the Japanese government is stepping up efforts to curb the spread of fire ants — native to South America — entering the country through containers shipped from overseas, mostly China.

The fire ants are known for their sting, which can cause anaphylaxis, a severe allergic reaction that can lead to breathing problems and even death.

After their talks, Japanese Environment Minister Masaharu Nakagawa told a press conference, "I hope that our cooperation will make further headway in measures" to deal with such species, apparently with fire ants in mind.

Nakagawa said during the plenary meeting it is important to detect and remove invasive species early on at ports, and that this is a common challenge for countries.

On Thursday, Nakagawa separately held talks with his Chinese counterpart Li Ganjie and agreed to consider how to cooperate to resolve the fire ant woes at the working level. He also met with South Korean counterpart Kim Eun Kyung and agreed to share information on the matter.

The Japanese Environment Ministry said a trilateral working-level meeting is expected to take place next week in the central Japan city of Shizuoka.

The fire ants were found for the first time in Japan when a container was unloaded in May in the city of Amagasaki in Hyogo Prefecture, western Japan, after it was shipped from Guangzhou, China via Kobe port. The ants have since then been found in major ports in Tokyo and other prefectures.

The ministers also agreed to launch joint research to consider how to achieve from the environmental standpoint the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals toward eradicating poverty and inequality, according to the statement.

The statement also said the ministers reviewed the progress made in a 2015-2019 action plan, listing nine areas of cooperation including the toxic air pollutant PM2.5, or particles measuring 2.5 microns in diameter or smaller.

According to the statement, they will continue and boost information sharing on regional air pollution control measures. They will also speed up efforts to deal with maritime waste and hold a seminar on waste management policy in Japan this year.

The three countries have held annual environmental talks since 1999. China is scheduled to host the next meeting in 2018.—Kyodo News ■

Brazil ferry capsizes, at least 22 dead in second accident this week

RIO DE JANEIRO — A ferry carrying roughly 130 passengers capsized in Brazil's coastal state of Bahia on Thursday, killing at least 22 people, the country's second fatal maritime accident this week, port authorities told Reuters.

Local authorities said 21 others had been rescued by the navy after the ferry capsized on an early morning trip between Ilha de Itaparica and state capital Salvador.

"Others were rescued by their own means, since the location was not far from the coast and also not so deep," said Flávio Almeida, a naval captain.

"We are working hard on rescue efforts at the site," he said.

The governor of Bahia declared three days of mourning in response to the tragedy.

In a separate incident in the northern state of Pará on Tuesday, the death toll rose to 21, with five people still missing, according to a statement on the Pará state government's website on Thursday.

The statement said 23 people were rescued on Tuesday.

The boat that sank Tuesday was not legally authorized to transport passengers, it said, citing the Regulation and Control Agency for Public Services for the State of Pará.—Reuters ■

Worst monsoon floods in years kill more than 1,200 across South Asia

BHUBANESWAR, (India)/DHAKA — The death toll from floods in India, Bangladesh and Nepal has climbed above 1,200, officials said on Friday, as rescue workers scramble to provide aid to millions of people stranded by the worst such disaster in years.

All three countries suffer frequent flooding during the June-September monsoon season, but international aid agencies say things are worse this year with thousands of villages cut off and people deprived of food and clean water for days.

Government officials in India's eastern state of Bihar said at least 379 people had been killed over the past few days, with thousands sheltered in relief camps away from their inundated homes.

"This year farming has collapsed due to floods and we will witness a sharp rise in unemployment," said Anirudh Kumar, a disaster management official in Patna, the capital of poor Bihar state known for mass migration to cities in search of jobs.

In neighbouring Uttar Pradesh, at least 88 people were killed when floods swamped nearly half of the vast state of 220 million people.

Rajan Kumar, a federal interior ministry official in New Delhi overseeing the rescue and relief operations, said at least 850 people had been killed in six flood-affected states in the past month.

"A second wave of floods led to widespread destruction," he said. "We will have to provide immediate rehabilitation aid to help millions affected directly."—Reuters ■

Hurricane Harvey strengthens, threatens US with most powerful storm in 12 years

GALVESTON, (Texas) — Hurricane Harvey intensified early on Friday into potentially the biggest hurricane to hit the US mainland in more than a decade, as authorities warned locals to shelter from what could be life-threatening winds and floods.

Harvey is set to make landfall late Friday or early Saturday on the central Texas coast where Corpus Christi and Houston are home to some of the biggest US refineries. Oil and gas operations have already been affected and gasoline prices have spiked.

"Now is the time to urgently hide from the wind. Failure to adequately shelter may result in serious injury, loss of life, or immense human suffering," the National Weather Service said.

Harvey grew into a category 2 storm with winds of 105 mph (169 kph) as it moved northwest about 185 miles (295 km) off Port O'Connor, Texas, the National Hurricane Center said.

Up to 35 inches (97 cm) of rain are expected over parts of Texas, with winds up to 125 mph, and sea levels may surge as high as 12 feet (3.7 metres). Louisiana could get 10 to 15 inches of rain. Flood warnings are in effect for Louisiana and northern Mexico.

"Life-threatening and devastating flooding expected near the coast due to heavy rainfall and storm surge," the hurricane center said.—Reuters ■

Nagasaki mayor, A-bomb survivor to attend nuke ban treaty signing

NAGASAKI — Nagasaki Mayor Tomihisa Taue said Friday he and a survivor of the city's atomic bombing plan to attend the signing ceremony in New York next month of the world's first treaty to comprehensively prohibit nuclear weapons.

"I want to send a message to the world that a bombed city is supporting this treaty," Taue told a press conference.

Representing the "hibakusha" — the survivors of the bombings — will be Masao Tomonaga, 74, honorary director of the Japanese Red Cross Society's atomic bomb hospital in Nagasaki. The ban treaty was adopted in July by 122 UN members. But Japan refused to participate in the negotiations, along with the world's nuclear weapon states and other countries under the US nuclear umbrella.

In a peace declaration at his city's annual ceremony to commemorate the atomic bombing on 9 August, 1945, Taue demanded that the Japanese government join the treaty, calling the government's stance "incomprehensible."

The treaty will be open for signing from 20 September at the UN headquarters in New York. It will enter into force 90 days after the document has been ratified by 50 nations and will be legally in effect for an unlimited time.

Taue also said Friday he wants to meet UN Secretary General Antonio Guterres and Elayne Whyte Gomez, the Costa Rican ambassador who led the treaty talks.

There is no plan for him to make a speech at the signing ceremony.

Izumi Nakamitsu, UN undersecretary general and high representative for disarmament affairs, had told Taue at a meeting in Nagasaki on 7 August that ambassadors of countries that adopted the treaty hope to see people from the city at the ceremony.

Tomonaga said Friday he feels greatly moved by the opportunity.

"The signing ceremony is a great step forward for this treaty, which was put into motion by the work of hibakusha and civic groups," he said.—Kyodo News ■

Meet Lulu Hashimoto, the 'living doll' fashion model

TOKYO — Meet Lulu Hashimoto, a "living doll" and the latest trend in Tokyo's fashion modeling scene.

Lulu — a full-body doll suit consisting of a wig, a mask and stockings patterned with doll-like joints — was born from one woman's desire to become cute.

"I have always really liked dolls and for me, the epitome of cuteness is dolls," said the 23-year-old fashion designer Hitomi Komaki, who created Lulu.

Dressing up as a mascot, called "kigurumi" in Japanese, is a popular art form in Japan. Komaki has taken it to a new level by creating a body suit that looks like a doll and lets you move like a human.

"Many people call my project a fetish, but for me it's not a fetish but fashion," she said. "It's like wearing nice clothes or putting on false eyelashes to become cuter."

There is only one Lulu body suit, Komaki said, but dancers, designers and models are among those who have worn the costume.

The identity of exactly who is inside is secret, she added.

The stockings worn by Lulu were created by fellow fashion designer Koh Ueno, who airbrushes doll-like joints onto the material.

"I want to see women wear these stockings and transform," said 29-year-old Ueno.

"I want them to experience the extraordinary - to become otherworldly, artificial, or like a doll," he said.

While popular among fans of Japanese subculture, Lulu is now turning heads at the annual Miss iD beauty pageant where she is among the 134 semi-finalists chosen from around 4,000 entrants.

The pageant, which includes "non-human" characters generated by artificial intelligence and three-dimensional computer graphics for the first time, will announce a winner in November.

Lulu's ability to blur the line between reality and fiction has mesmerized fans on social media, where the Lulu Twitter and Instagram accounts have drawn tens of thousands of followers.

"I find it miraculous that dolls and humans — two things that exist in different planes — are standing in the same space," said Erika Kato, 24, who met Lulu for the first time at a recent fan event.

The possibility of wearing a suit and becoming Lulu also appealed to fans like 22-year-old Miu Shimoda.

"I'd like to be a beautiful girl like Lulu at least once in my life," she said.—Reuters ■

French singer Charles Aznavour gets Hollywood star at age 93

LOS ANGELES — French singer Charles Aznavour finally got a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame on Thursday, capping a more than 70-year career as one of his country's most popular entertainers.

Aznavour, 93, who was born Shahnour Varinag Aznavourian in Paris to Armenian parents, has sold more than 100 million records in 80 countries. He has been described as France's equivalent to Frank Sinatra.

The singer on Thursday described himself as happy at the honor - with reservations.

"The word I can say is happy, and with a part of emotion, of course, because we are far away from my country, from my way of living, from my way of being received by the people," he said at the Hollywood ceremony.

Aznavour began his career peddling his words and music to the Paris boulevardiers of the 40s and 50s - Edith Piaf, Maurice Chevalier and Charles Trenet.

He soon became adept himself at interpreting emotional love songs, recording hits like "She," "Hier Encore" (Yesterday When I Was Young), "Après l'Amour" (After Love) and "La Boheme."

Aznavour is also known for his humanitarian work in Armenia, especially after the 1988 earthquake that killed tens of thousands of people. He was granted Armenian citizenship in 2008 and was appointed in 2009 to be that country's ambassador to Switzerland, a position he still holds.—Reuters ■

Hollywood studios win ruling over VidAngel family-friendly filters

LOS ANGELES — A federal appeals court has sided with Hollywood studios by refusing to let VidAngel stream family-friendly versions of their movies that filter out profane language, sex and nudity, violence, and alcohol and drug use.

The 9th US Circuit Court of Appeals on Thursday let stand a preliminary injunction against the Provo, Utah-based start-up, and in favor of Walt Disney Co and its LucasFilm unit, 20th Century Fox Film Inc and Warner Bros Entertainment. US District Judge Andre Birotte in Los Angeles had found that the studios were likely to prevail on their copyright claims, and absent an injunction suffer irreparable harm such as lost revenue and damaged relationships and goodwill with licensees. The decision was a victory for Hollywood in its long fight against alleged piracy.

VidAngel said it was reviewing its next steps after the 3-0 decision by the Pasadena, California-based appeals court.

"On the legal front, we are just getting started," Chief Executive Neal Harmon said in a statement. "We will fight for a family's right to filter on modern technology all the way." VidAngel buys DVDs and Blu-ray discs containing movies and TV shows, "rips" decrypted copies to computers, and streams sanitized content to customers for as little as $1. Its lawyers said a 2005 federal law, the Family Home Movie Act, shielded VidAngel from piracy claims by letting viewers, including parents with children, filter unwanted content from "authorized" copies of movies. Circuit Judge Andrew Hurwitz, however, said VidAngel's stance would create a "giant loophole" in copyright law, sanctioning infringement so long as copies of movies such as Disney's "Star Wars: The Force Awakens" were purchased legally. "If the mere purchase of an authorized copy alone precluded infringement liability," Hurwitz wrote, "the statute would severely erode the commercial value of the public performance right in the digital context, permitting, for example, unlicensed streams which filter out only a movie's credits."—Reuters ■

Massachusetts woman named as $759 million Powerball winner

BOSTON — Massachusetts lottery officials on Thursday identified a 53-year-old health care worker who lives in Chicopee as the winner of more than $750 million (585.6 million pounds) in a Powerball drawing, the largest prize for a single ticket-holder in the contest's history.

The woman, Mavis Wanczyk, appeared at an afternoon news conference to claim her prize.

"I wanted to get this over and done with, and then everyone would leave me alone," Wanczyk, the mother of a 31-year-old daughter and a 26-year-old son, told reporters on Thursday. She said she had worked for the past 32 years at a Springfield hospital, but added: "I've called them and told them I will not be coming back."

Powerball said on its website that the single ticket matched all six numbers drawn on Wednesday night: 6, 7, 16, 23, 26 and the Powerball of 4. Wanczyk said she learned of her win when a colleague encouraged her to check her ticket as she left work on Wednesday.

"I said: 'I know it's never going to be me; it's just a pipe dream,'" Wanczyk said, adding that she was shocked to find "I am a winner." —Reuters ■

At ancient pyramid in Peru, remains of 19th century Chinese labourers found

LIMA — Archaeologists exploring Peru's pre-Columbian past recently unearthed a glimpse of a less prominent chapter in the Andean country's history - the remains of 16 Chinese labourers who toiled in the country over 100 years ago.

The bodies, thought to be those of indentured workers brought to Peru to replace slave labour, were found buried at the top of an adobe pyramid first used by the ancient Ichma people, Roxana Gomez, the lead archaeologist of the site, said on Thursday.

Peru was one of the biggest destinations for Chinese labour in Latin America in the 19th century, a market that thrived after slavery was abolished in the country in 1854.

The Chinese found at the Bellavista pyramid in Lima were buried in the late 1800s and early 1900s and had likely picked cotton at a nearby plantation in "very difficult" conditions, said Gomez.

In a possible sign of how the Chinese gradually emerged from dire poverty in Peru, the first 11 bodies were shrouded in cloth and placed in the ground, while the last five wore blue-green jackets and were buried in wooden coffins, Gomez said.

Archaeologist works at a tomb of one of sixteen Chinese migrants, discovered buried at the turn of the 20th century in the pre-colombian pyramid of Bellavista, according to Ministry of Culture, in Lima, Peru, on 24 August 2017. PHOTO: REUTERS

"In one Chinese coffin, an opium pipe and a small ceramic vessel were included in the funerary ensemble," said Gomez.

Chinese labourers were generally not allowed to be buried at Lima's Catholic cemeteries, forcing them to improvise burial sites, according to Peru's Culture Ministry.

The remains of Chinese labourers were previously found in Lima at other adobe pyramids known as "huacas." Built by the indigenous societies that once ruled much of Peru's Pacific coast, huacas were used as administrative and religious centres where members of the elite were often buried with gold objects, ceramics or human sacrifices.

Gomez said the huacas had a sacred association that might have made them attractive places for burial by Chinese labourers. The Bellavista huaca was occupied by Ichma starting in about 1000 A.D. and was later annexed by the Incan empire until the arrival of Spanish conquerors who deemed huacas blasphemous.

Italian immigrants later kept vineyards at the base of the site, Gomez added.

"The best way to understand our history is as a continuum of different cultures," said Gomez. —Reuters ■

Medals for Sepak Takraw, billiards at SEA Games

Myanmar won the gold medal in the Sepak Takraw women's doubles event, and the silver medal at the men's double Sepak takraw event at the Titiawangsa Stadium.

The Myanmar men's team was defeated by Thailand in the final of the men's doubles event, but the women's team beat Vietnam decisively in the final match for the gold medal. At the Billiard singles matches held at KICC Convention Center Hall (4), Myanmar won the silver medal as Chit Ko Ko beat the Singapore player decisively. Myanmar billiards player Nay Thway Oo got the bronze medal after he was defeated by the Singapore player in the semifinal.

In the snooker event, Ko Htet from Myanmar beat Malaysia and advanced to the semifinals.

Myanmar, Thailand to play semifinal today at SEA Games

Kyaw Zin Lin

The Myanmar men's football team will play an important semifinal match against Thailand today at 2:30pm Myanmar Standard Time (4pm Malaysia Standard Time) at Selayang Stadium in Kuala Lumpur.

Both teams are motivated for a victory at this year's SEA Games. Thailand is a former gold medalist in the event, and Myanmar won the silver medal at the 28th SEA Games in Singapore in 2015. Myanmar will likely use Aung Thu and Aung Kaung Man at the attacking positions and Si Thu Aung and Maung Maung Lwin in the midfield.

"Our team is in the best shape, as the players have had enough rest before this match, but we will still have to work hard, as Thailand is one of the best teams in ASEAN and possesses not only brilliant attackers but also defenders," said Myanmar Head Coach Gerd Zeise.

"Thailand is a previous SEA Games winner, nevertheless we, Myanmar team players, will do the best to reach the final stage", said Myanmar star Aung Kaung Mann. ■

Myanmar U-18 to have friendly match in Thailand

In preparation for the AFF U-18 Youth Championship, the Myanmar U-18 national football team will play a friendly match with Thailand U-18 team in Bangkok on Sunday, according to the Myanmar Football Federation website.

The 2017 AFF U-18 Youth Championship is the 14th edition of the competition, organized by the ASEAN Football Federation. This year's football matches will be held from 4 to 17 September.

Myanmar drew out of the group stage last year. Eleven-member associations of the ASEAN Football Federation will take part in the tournament featuring two groups of five and six teams. Host Myanmar is included in Group B together with Vietnam, the Philippines, Brunei and Indonesia. Group A consists of previous champion Thailand, Malaysia, Laos, Cambodia, Singapore and Timor-Leste. ■

Japan women bag 3 golds at world c'ships

PARIS — Rio Olympic champions Sara Dosho and Risako Kawai and debutant Yui Susaki won gold at the world wrestling championships, while Mayu Mukaida settled for silver Thursday as all four Japanese women advanced to the finals of their respective weight categories.

Dosho defeated Aline Focken of Germany 3-0 in the 69-kilogram final, Kawai beat Allison Ragan of the United States by technical fall at 60 kg and 18-year-old Susaki came from behind to prevail over Emilia Vuc of Romania in 48 kg, each claiming her first world title.

Vanessa Kaladzinskaya of Belarus prevented a Japanese sweep Thursday by winning the 53-kg final 8-6 over Mukaida.

Japan has claimed five gold medals at the ongoing world championships in Paris, including Haruna Okuno's win in the women's 55 kg and Kenichiro Fumita's victory in the men's Greco-Roman 59-kg division.

Dosho, 22, had suffered a left shoulder injury prior to the worlds and has been able to compete with the help of pain killers.

"I was able to win at the Olympics, but I didn't have a gold medal from the world championships," said Dosho, making her fourth appearance at a world meet after finishing runner-up behind Focken in 2014 and taking bronze in 2013 and 2015.

"If I didn't win here, I couldn't have helped it if people thought my Olympic victory was just a fluke. I feel like I finally became a real champion," she said.

Kawai, who won gold in 63 kg at the Rio de Janeiro Games last year and was a silver medalist at the worlds in 2015, noted that the gold medal at a world championship has "different weight" from the won she won at the Olympic Games. "These world championships were difficult because I had won at the Olympics. Opponents have done a lot of research on me. I think this difficulty is something that only Sara (Dosho) and I can understand," the 22-year-old Kawai said.

Susaki, the reigning Asian champion who won four of her five bouts — including the final — by technical fall, said, "I endured hard training because I wanted to become a world champion. I'm very happy to win the gold medal."

Mukaida, who won in last year's world championships for non-Olympic weight classes at 55 kg, allowed 2012 world champion Kaladzinskaya to come from behind in the last 10 seconds of their match. Japanese women won six medals — four golds, one silver and one bronze — in eight categories, in the absence of veterans Kaori Ichio, who won her fourth straight Olympic gold at Rio last year, and Saori Yoshida, who had three consecutive Summer Games golds until settling for silver in Rio. Meanwhile, the sport's ruling body, United World Wrestling, has eliminated the four weight classes in which Japanese women won gold medals at last year's Olympics. The new classes will be 50, 53, 57, 62, 68 and 76 kg. Japan's Rio medals came in 48, 58, 63 and 69 kg. —Kyodo News ■
