Ministries of Information, Hotels and Tourism, Natural Resources and Environmental Conservation expound on third-year performances

THE press conference on the third-year journey of the Union-level entities was continued yesterday. The Ministry of Information, Ministry of Hotels and Tourism, and Ministry of Natural Resources and Environmental Conservation answered to reporters in the Ministry of Information's meeting hall in Nay Pyi Taw.

Dr. Pe Myint (Union Minister for Information)

The Union Minister said MRTV works for its own development and that of private channels as well. They succeeded in organizing licences for five content providers who have begun broadcasting last year.

He said the Radio and Television Broadcasting Law has been enacted and a bylaw is being drafted. Once the bylaw has been legislated, MoI will establish the Broadcasting Council outlined in both the law and bylaw, said the Union Minister. He said this will also allow development of radio broadcasting. Currently, there is a pilot project for a private radio channel near Yangon; Htantabin's Kayay FM. He said this will open the way for organizations and the private sector across the country.

The Union Minister then said the IPRD branches throughout the nation's townships and districts have opened libraries and office spaces for the public. However, less and less people are reading books nowadays, said the Union Minister, but MoI is carrying out plans to bring the library to the readers. He said they are cooperating with the Daw Khin Kyi Foundation and with Shanti Volunteer Association.

The Union Minister said they are working hard to breed democratic practices, freedom of expression, systematic debates, and democratic culture among the public and to that end they have converted the IPRD offices into community centres. He said the community centres host various clubs for enthusiasts, youths, avid readers and aspiring artistes.

The Union Minister said MoI has been organizing public talks between government leaders and the general public. He said a Hluttaw representative whose constituency covers the public talk's location, a relevant government official or someone from the NGO sector related to the talk's topic are present to foster democratic practices.

The Printing and Publishing Department printed 35 million school textbooks last year and will print 39 million this year, said the Union Minister. He said this is a larger number than what external publishers are printing and added that Sarpay Beikman is conducting a multitude of literature distribution and development as well.

The Union Minister then said the News and Periodicals Enterprise is handling the Myanmar newspapers, Kyemon and Myanma Alinn, and the English daily, The Global New Light of Myanmar, in addition to their online platform, Myanmar Digital News.

The Union Minister concluded by saying the newspapers are a source of information on global events and the rising trend sees print media giving way to online media. He said they are working to keep the print media running while developing online media, with one such endeavor being the launch of Myanmar Digital News.

U Ohn Maung (Union Minister for Hotels and Tourism)

The Union Minister opened his speech by applauding the tourism industry as a smokeless factory that boosts the national economy and promotes the livelihoods of all citizens.

He said this year saw the establishment of the Central Committee on National Tourism Development on 6 February, the Tourism Committee on 3 March, and 15 Regional Tourism Committees on 12 April.

The Union Minister said his ministry began digitally marketing Myanmar with increased efforts on 10 April 2019. He said the website www.tourism.gov.mm was relaunched with a new web design on the same day. He said they upload posts, photos and videos for tourist attractions and travel destinations on social media platforms every day.

The Union Minister said they began implementing paid marketing campaigns such as Google Marketing and Social Media Marketing in April this year. He said this will generate positive views on Myanmar through the online audience. He said they will implement video campaigns on YouTube in the future. He said they are also working on launching a tourism web portal (www.travel.myanmar.com.mm) for both tourists and people working in the hotel and tourism industry.

The Union Minister said Myanmar upgraded the Myanmar-Thailand border gates of Tachilek-Meisei, Myawaddy-Maesot, Kawthoung-Ranong, Htiki-Phunaron to international border gates on 24 August 2013. He said the Myanmar-India border gates of Tamu-Moray and Reedhorda-Zokawtar were also upgraded to international border gates on 8 August 2018.

The Union Minister said they successfully coordinated with the Shan State Government to allow permission tours to travel along the Taunggyi-Kengtung-Tachilek highway. He said they extended the visa matter on 1 October 2018 to a one-year extension from 1 October 2019 to 30 September 2020.

The Union Minister said 3.55 million tourists visited Myanmar in 2018, a 3.15 per cent increase from 2017's 3.44 million. He said tourists entering by flights, cruise ships and passport visas reached 1.39 million in 2018, while border pass entries reached 2.15 million. He said tourism in the first four months of 2019 have also been exceptionally high.

The Union Minister said they have been actively supporting community-based tourism in the hope that it will decrease damage to the natural environment and elevate the livelihood of the regional locals while highlighting their customs and traditions to the world. He concluded by saying they are working closely with other ministries and organizations to finalize the Tourism Master Plan 2020-2025 that will encompass the entire country.

U Khin Maung Yi (Permanent Secretary of NREC)

Combating corruption with ironclad conviction

“LET us picture our country as a human body and corruption (the bribery kind) as a disease. Through this perspective, we can see that this malignant disease has spread to all parts of Myanmar’s body.”

“The government departments, civil society organizations, private businesses, and institutional concepts of law, rules, customs, and procedures are suffering from serious illnesses caused by corruption.”

These are excerpts from the Anti-Corruption Commission Chair-man’s speech, delivered at the International Anti-Corruption Day Forum in December last year.

Corruption and bribery have taken root like a chronic disease, but we believe the anti-corruption movement is akin to medical treatment that dresses the wounds and slowly heals the illness over time.

It is now evident that the Union Government has taken a firm stand on anti-corruption, and the public is no longer tolerant of nepotism and other forms of corruption plaguing our nation.

Although the pace at which the Anti-Corruption Commission is carrying out its duties is slower than what people would like, we must remember that the scale of corruption in the country is huge, and it has remained unchecked for too long. Not to mention, the ACC is short of skilled, experienced members and technological support. But in spite of these shortcomings, it has managed to tackle monumental cases at the national level.

It is now evident that the Union Government has taken a firm stand on anti-corruption, and the public is no longer tolerant of nepotism and other forms of corruption plaguing our nation.

The shift in attitude towards corruption has also caused some long-practiced corrupt customs to disappear. These results are the strength that will push us all forward to achieve greater results.

We must all view eradicating corruption as a national duty and do our part, no matter how small or big, in every sector we can contribute to, thus empowering the nation’s anti-corruption movement.

The role of citizens and the media is especially important, and with their combined strength, we wish to successfully remove the blight of corruption to protect our integrity, development, and culture.

City Life Survey: Amplifying Myanmar’s Urban Voices

By Hillary Yu Zin Htoon

YANGON is a city rich with history—a former capital, a center of commerce, and today, a city bristling with construction cranes, clogged with vehicles, and throbbing with the aspirations of its swelling population. Demographic changes, economic growth, and Myanmar’s new international openness have left the Yangon City Development Committee, the city’s municipal government, scrambling to deliver public services and provide effective governance for a population of almost six million.

After decades of international isolation and government secrecy that left a lasting deficit in public trust and participation, the local governments of Myanmar’s major cities have begun to recognize that effective governance is built on communication between a city’s leaders and its citizens. Quite simply, governments cannot serve the governed if they don’t know what’s going on. Elected officials, who must provide effective public services with limited resources, are awakening to the information value of public participation. The Development Affairs Organization of Taunggyi, a city in Southern Shan State, and the mayor of Mandalay City, for example, have been actively corresponding with city residents on Facebook. In Yangon’s recent election debates, one candidate proclaimed that citizens would be able to call him personally to register complaints.

As a citizen of Yangon City, I understand the importance of this public dialogue. Government decisions on routine matters such as public transit, waste collection, deteriorating air quality, the proliferation of concrete high-rises, or the growing intensity of traffic jams affect the well-being of every resident of this city every day. But while openness to public opinion is an important step for an emerging democracy, anecdotal information from Facebook posts and phone calls from dissatisfied citizens can be treacherously unreliable, amplifying the voices of a motivated, but not necessarily representative, few. Clearly, the first step in responsive, democratic policymaking—understanding the will of the people—is a tall one.

This is why my team at The Asia Foundation, Myanmar, has developed the City Life Survey (CLS), a modern data tool for democratic policymaking by urban decision-makers.

Launched as a pilot in 2017, CLS is a multiyear, multicity, public-perception survey designed to provide reliable information about the lives and concerns of Myanmar’s urban residents. A sample of 2,400 respondents answered 135 questions encompassing their social, economic, and physical well-being and their opinions on urban problems. The substantial sample size and formal survey methodology assure that results represent an accurate cross-section of the urban population, from prosperous residents of city centers to recently arrived migrants on the outskirts.

The survey yielded a variety of practical information for improving the responsiveness of local government. It showed, for example, that if the citizens of Yangon could choose how to spend public funds, they would put most into roads, drainage, and garbage collection. My own, highly unscientific survey, in the form of informal conversations with multiple citizens at municipal election debates, agrees with these findings.

In another interesting result, more than half of CLS respondents revealed that they do not clearly understand what their municipal government is responsible for or how it pays for its operations. This government opacity has sown mistrust, fostered suspicions of corruption, and created a destructive mismatch between government operations and public expectations. I used to be one of these residents. I would see workers filling potholes or clearing drains, yet I never understood why these roads were mended while those on another side of the city were not. The insight from CLS that this incomprehension is widespread should be a call to action to municipal governments to increase public outreach and transparency.

On a positive note, the survey found high levels of social trust among urban residents, with 48 percent saying that the people in their city are trustworthy. Social engagement is also very high, with a whopping 92 percent donating to a charitable cause and 60 percent volunteering their time every few months. This reservoir of social capital will be a valuable source of public support for local governments as the seek to rationalize vital public functions such as the tax system.

Even with good will and a commitment to serving the public, identifying and prioritizing urban issues is complex. As CLS continues to collect data and expands to include additional cities, policymakers across Myanmar will be able to hear clearly the voice of the urban public as a community. We hope that CLS will spark a demand for more reliable data, systematic research and analysis, healthy competition among cities, and better-informed

Cotton farmers in Sagaing plan to plant more acreage

COTTON will soon be cultivated extensively in Sagaing Region with the support of the regional government, according to the head of the region's Agriculture Department.

Plans are under way to bring over 130,000 acres of land in the region under cotton cultivation, said Daw Than Than Nu, Assistant Director, Myanma Cotton and Allied fibre Crops Division.

Cotton is currently being grown in 19 townships of Sagaing, including Monywa, Yinmabin, Shwebo, and Kanbalu districts. With growers extending cotton plantations, the authorities are offering courses for producing quality cotton for the domestic and foreign market. Courses on production methods, cotton grinding, and assessment for producing high-quality cotton are being offered.

Local cotton varieties Shwetaung 8 and 9 are mostly grown in Sagaing Region.

As it is hard to find pedigree cotton seeds in the market, civil society organizations and the private sector need to work together to maintain the supply of cotton seeds and fulfill the demand for raw materials, according to the head of the department.

"We need seed production companies to emerge in the local market. Seed companies and growers must cooperate as local varieties need to be modified to become climate and pest resistant," said Daw Than Than Nu.

In Myanmar, cotton is mainly cultivated in Magway, Sagaing, Mandalay, and Bago regions, with over 550,000 acres producing about 160,000 tons of cotton in these regions.

Pre-monsoon cotton is harvested in July and August, while post-monsoon cotton is harvested in October.

At present, cotton is fetching between K1,300 and K3,600 per viss in the market. It is a lucrative industrial crop and is highly demanded by local cotton factories and the foreign market.—MYANTRADE

Is this government or private sector?

By Aung Naing Oo

Questions

Section 35 of the Constitution of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar states, "The economic system of the Union is market economy system." After adopting basic needs of the market economic system with frameworks of laws, rules and organizations step by step, the government implements the market economic system.

While discharging duty of director general of the Directorate of Investment and Company Administration, I faced questions raised by friend businesspersons from economic sector. They frequently asked me that the government should extend businesses in the nation or allow private sector to do so. I would like to clarify my opinion with regard to that question.

Why does the government do so?

Participation of the government in some businesses can be seen not only in developed countries but in developing ones. If we analyze why the government operates businesses, we can see that the government operates businesses-

(1) At a time when the government can carry out the tasks with higher capabilities and better trust in commodities and services which are needs of the people than that of private sector

(2) In a situation which is not suitable for the private sector to do any business without comprehensive market rules and regulations

(3) At a time when the government should participate in a sector for implementation of the strategic plan for serving the national interest.

State's economic policy

No 2 point of economic policies adopted by the government for shaping State economy mentions that "to make state-owned economic enterprises more successful, to privatize some possible state-owned businesses and to support small and medium enterprises which support job opportunities and economic growth". In reviewing it, it can be seen that State-owned economic enterprises would be placed under reform process while preparations would be made to privatize some businesses. Hence, it can be reviewed that some State-owned economic enterprises would be handed over to the private sector with reducing participation of the government in businesses in line with the State's economic policy.

Myanmar Sustainable Development Plan-MSDP

The Myanmar Sustainable Development Plan-MSDP adopted by the government in August 2018 set aims that "the government shall re-identify State-owned economic enterprises depending on their types, reform financing system, make these businesses skillful in management and operations, enhance supervisory tasks and transparency, equalize the businesses which can promote economic functions of the State or privatize them." Strategy 2.5.2 of the Goal-II of Pillar-I of the MSDP was adopted "to corporatize, commercialise, restructure, or, where appropriate, privatize SEEs which operate in competitive markets." That is why conclusion can be drawn that the government would carry out corporatization, equalization and privatization for the State-owned economic enterprises. On one hand, it is obvious that the government would gradually withdraw its participation from the businesses.

Myanmar Private Sector Development Framework and Action Plan

The government approved the Private Sector Development Framework and Action Plan in April 2016. It mentions the Pillar Four: Restructuring the State's Role in Business Enterprise and Service Delivery. The provisions under the aforesaid pillar state that "while the transitions of Eastern and Central Europe, Viet Nam, and other socialist economies are instructive, Myanmar can also benefit from the experience of developed, market-based economies and their approach to state-owned enterprise (SOE) restructuring, privatization, and public-private partnerships," "to choose monopolized farms among State-owned economic enterprises to be halted step by step, build capacity under rules and adopt procedures of transparently competitive bidding and tender systems for privatization and services for infrastructures," and "the type of State-owned economic enterprises has basic weakness. Whenever the State holds the majority of shares, the government may interfere in companies under political trend. So, decisions which do not base on economy would be adopted. Consequently, loss of investments of the people would appear." In line with the Private Sector Development Framework and Action Plan, plans are underway to reduce the role of State-owned economic enterprises and expand the private sector.

State-owned economic enterprises law

In the time of the State Law and Restoration Council, the State-owned economic enterprises law was enacted in 1989. It was a law to privatize some sectors of the economy of Myanmar under the socialist economy system practised before 1988. The aforesaid law defined that the government shall operate extraction and sale of teak, establishment of forest plantations, exploration and production of oil and natural gas, production and export of pearl, jade and gems, production and breeding of fish and prawn at the lakes set for conducting research by the government, postal and telecommunications, aviation, rail transportation, banking and insurance, broadcast and telecasting, mining and exporting, electricity generation, and production of security and defence equipment.

The private sector was allowed to operate remaining sectors. Section 4 of the law stated that if it is beneficial to the State, it shall allow to operate the tasks set for the State as joint venture with the government or as private-run ones. Hence, it can be seen that the tasks restricted under the law are being operated by private sector freely.

However, the above-mentioned law was out of date in comparison with the current period. So, it cannot support enhancement of capacity for State-owned economic enterprises.

The law is just a line between the government and the private sector in the economic sector. It does not consist of management, procedures for operating businesses, corporate management, adoption of strategies for businesses, disclosure and transparency of company conditions, transparent matters and capital management similar to that of State Owned Enterprise Law being practised by other countries. The majority of countries abide by company laws relevant countries and avoid enactment of the laws which will prioritize State-owned economic enterprises and separate rights. Three companies laws of Myanmar include corporatization for State-owned economic enterprises to private the State-owned economic enterprises, and it should not do the process hastily. For example, if privatization is implemented without enactment of firmed laws, original purposes would not meet the goal.

If so, it will mean selling of State-owned resources to private sector only. On one hand, State-owned economic enterprises should not monopolize the private sector but lead to partnership to the private sector and benefit the citizens. That is why it needs to emerge a State-owned economic enterprises law meeting international standards.

All in all, I would like to conclude my presentation that if one asks government or private sector, only private sector must take a leading role in the economic arena while the government should emphasize four pillars as easing for development of private sector; undertaking of easy and smooth processes, assistance for development, and disciplinary control.

Yellow Pages Rule

What is the notable system being practised in some countries is Yellow Pages Rule. It means it is rules for the government not to participate in the Yellow Pages of relevant countries similar to business directories such as Yangon Directory and Mandalay Directory in Myanmar. It defines that if the government operates remaining businesses expressed in the Yellow Pages, the government needs to withdraw from the businesses. For example, the government exactly enacts the Yellow Book Rules in the Entrepreneurial Code of 2015 in Kazakhstan.

According to the law, if any private company operates same businesses of the State-owned economic enterprises engaging in production, works and services except some restricted businesses, the State-owned economic enterprises must be privatized or operated as joint venture with the private company before withdrawal from that sector. Despite lack of capacity to exercise the Yellow Pages Rule now, Myanmar should consider to abide by such rule in the future.

Conclusion

In reviewing the aforesaid points, I believe the readers may know the answers of the question "Is this government or private sector?" The word government means participation and investment of the government in the businesses in addition to standing as beneficiary owner. It is important that the privatization law should be drawn and enacted systematically for privatizing

Arsenal's Mkhitarian to miss Europa League final over safety fears

LONDON—Arsenal's Armenian midfielder Henrikh Mkhitarian will miss the Europa League final against Chelsea in Baku amid fears over his safety.

Mkhitarian's well-being was a concern for Arsenal due to the tense political dispute between Armenia and final hosts Azerbaijan. The Premier League club have decided against Mkhitarian travelling with the rest of Unai Emery's squad for next Wednesday's game.

"We are very disappointed to announce that Henrikh Mkhitarian will not be travelling with the squad for our UEFA Europa League final against Chelsea," an Arsenal statement announced on Tuesday. "We have thoroughly explored all the options for Micki to be part of the squad but after discussing this with Micki and his family we have collectively agreed he will not be in our travelling party." Azerbaijan's ambassador to the UK, Tahir Taghizadeh, had insisted Mkhitarian would be free from any threat of violence, but it was reported the star didn't believe he would be safe on the pitch. "Having considered all the current options, we had to take the tough decision for me not to travel with the squad to the UEL Final against Chelsea," Mkhitarian tweeted.

"It's the kind of game that doesn't come along very often for us players and I must admit, it hurts me a lot to miss it. I will be cheering my teammates on! Let's bring it home." Mkhitarian had featured in 11 games during the Europa League campaign and his absence will be a big blow as Arsenal look for the victory they need to qualify for next season's Champions League. "We have written to UEFA expressing our deep concerns about this situation," the Arsenal statement added. "We're also very sad that a player will miss out on a major European final in circumstances such as this, as it is something that comes along very rarely in a footballer's career."

"Micki has been a key player in our run to the final so this is a big loss for us from a team perspective." Armenia captain Mkhitarian skipped the Gunners' Europa League fixture against Qarabag in October because of tensions caused by a dispute over the Nagorny Karabakh region.

have feuded over Nagorny Karabakh since Armenian separatists seized the territory in a war that claimed about 30,000 lives in the early 1990s. A ceasefire was agreed in 1994 but the two countries remain locked in a bitter dispute with frequent exchanges of fire, and tensions are such that Mkhitarian also did not travel to Azerbaijan with former club Borussia Dortmund for a Europa League match against Galaba FK in 2015.—AFP ■
