Build new roads and bridges for higher socio-economic status

Good transport means smooth flow of goods and increased trade between regions within the country. At the same time, it can also raise the social and economic status of the people.

This being so, the government has been building new roads, railroads and bridges wherever necessary like a network. As a result, transport in every state and division has become smooth and secure and there has been a parallel development in the political, economic and social sectors.

The Swa Chaung bridge built in Yedashe Township in Bago Division was opened on 29 May. The bridge is on the Yangon-Toungoo-Mandalay Union Highway. It is a reinforced concrete bridge 270 feet long and can bear a vehicle weighing up to 60 tons.

The Swa Chaung bridge is one of 226 bridges 180 feet and above long built by Public Works under the Ministry of Construction and it has become the 18th major bridge in Bago Division. With the opening of this new bridge, transportation of raw materials to and finished products from factories and workshops in Thagara industrial region in Yedashe Township will become quicker and easier.

Bago Division is one of the major regions for the development of national economy. Paddy, sugar cane, edible oil crops and various kinds of beans and pulses grow very well in Yedashe Township. Therefore, the Swa Chaung bridge will contribute a lot to transportation of agricultural produce and their trade.

As the government has built new roads and bridges not only in the plains but also over mountain ranges and across rivers and creeks, regional products trade has developed and education, health, social and economic status of the people in the region improved.

New US Afghan strategy will cost billions, take years

WASHINGTON, 3 June—President Barack Obama's choice to take charge of the war in Afghanistan on Tuesday called "significant growth" of the Afghan army and national police the key to his strategy, but the annual cost of building and maintaining the existing Afghan force is more than four times larger than the entire Afghan economy.

Army Lt-Gen Stanley McChrystal's testimony to the Senate Armed Services Committee, which is considering his nomination to lead US and NATO troops in Afghanistan, suggested that the US strategy in Afghanistan is likely to cost American taxpayers and NATO member nations billions of dollars for many years.

The Afghan National Army is now 86,000 strong, and the national police have 81,000 members. The US military has said it wants to expand the Army to 134,000 and the police to 82,000 by the end of 2011. McChrystal said he plans to boost those figures, but said he won't know by how much until he's in Afghanistan.

However, maintaining and building the security forces to the current 2011 goals is estimated to cost roughly $4 billion a year, while Afghanistan's economy generates only $800 million a year. Sen Lindsey Graham, R- SC, told McChrystal on Tuesday that the US would have to foot the bill for years.

"We are building an army they will never be able to afford," a senior US military official told McClatchy. The official spoke on the condition of anonymity because he wasn't authorized to talk to reporters.—Internet

Bomb kills NATO soldier in Afghanistan

KABUL, 3 June—A bomb planted by militants has killed a foreign soldier serving with NATO in southern Afghanistan, the deadliest battlefield in the war against Taliban militants, the alliance said Wednesday. The International Security Assistance on Force released a brief statement that did not give the nationality of the soldier killed on Tuesday. Most of the troops in the south are Americans, British or Canadians.

Soldiers leave Iraqi cities for sweltering tents

CAME CARVER, 3 June—The US military is expanding some rural bases and building others to house thousands of troops displaced by a June deadline to withdraw from Iraq's major cities. With continual power outages pushing temperatures well above 100 degrees, that can't come soon enough for some soldiers living in sweltering tents at Camp Carver in the small town of Madain, about 15 miles southeast of the capital. "Can't wait," said Spc. Oscar Garza, 20, of Port Lavaca, Texas, as he carted his bed frame to newly constructed plywood houses with air conditioners elsewhere on the US base. The Americans have already closed or handed over 60 urban bases since the beginning of the year, with more than 50 others tentatively scheduled to be closed or returned to Iraqi control by the end of June, said Lt Col Brian Maka, a military spokesman.—Internet

Chavez accuses CIA of backing plot to kill him

CARACAS, 3 June—President Hugo Chavez on Tuesday alleged that US intelligence agencies were behind a purported assassination plot that prevented him from visiting El Salvador.

Chavez had planned to attend the inauguration of leftist President Mauricio Funes in the Central American nation on Monday, but said he canceled his trip due to the alleged plot.

“I don’t doubt that the intelligence organizations of the United States are behind this,” Chavez said, accusing them of plotting with Cuban militant Luis Posada Carriles to murder him.

He said Venezuelan intelligence services have “very precise information” that they were planning to launch rockets at the Cubana de Aviacion plane he was going to travel in.

Officials at the US Embassy in Caracas couldn’t immediately be reached for comment. The US State Department has denied similar accusations by Chavez in the past.

Venezuela has asked the US to extradite Posada, a former CIA operative and opponent of former Cuban president Fidel Castro who is accused of plotting the 1976 bombing of a Cuban plane off Barbados that killed 73 people on board. The 81-year-old Posada is accused of plotting the bombing while living in Venezuela but denies involvement.—Internet

Low fare Ryanair soars to Europe’s biggest airline amid financial storm

LONDON, 3 June—Ryanair, Europe’s largest low fare airline, has emerged as Europe’s biggest airline in terms of passenger numbers and market capitalization thanks to a growing number of price-sensitive customers amid the global financial crisis.

Having overtaken major rivals like Air France, British Airways and Lufthansa, the Irish airline is expected to continue its “robust performance” as economic prospect remains uncertain.

Ryanair announced on Tuesday a net profit of 105 million euros (some 149 million USdollars) over the last financial year.

Ryanair’s CEO, Michael

Polluted ecosystems can recover

NEW HAVEN, 3 June—A Yale University study suggests most polluted or damaged ecosystems can recover within a lifetime if there’s a public commitment to the restoration.

Yale School of Forestry and Environmental Studies researchers looked at 240 independent studies and found forest ecosystems recovered in 42 years on average, while ocean bottoms recovered in less than 10 years.

Researchers said ecosystems undergoing multiple, interacting disturbances recovered in 56 years, while those affected by invasive species, mining, oil spills or trawling recovered in as little as five years.

The scientists said

most ecosystems took longer to recover from human-induced disturbances than from natural events, such as hurricanes.

“The damages to these ecosystems are pretty serious,” said Professor Oswald Schmitz, co-author of the meta-analysis with postdoctoral student Holly Jones. “But the message is that if societies choose to become sustainable, ecosystems will recover. It isn’t hopeless.”

Debris confirms crash of Air France jet

RIO DE JANEIRO, 3 June—Brazil Tuesday confirmed the debris found earlier on the open Atlantic Ocean belonged to Air France Flight 447, solidifying the crash of the jet that went missing early on Monday.

The three-mile (five kilometres) path of wreckage found in the Atlantic Ocean belonged to the Air France jet carrying 228 people that was believed to have crashed into the sea, Brazilian Defence Minister Nelson Jobim said on Tuesday.

The debris were found about 400 miles from Brazil's Fernando de Noronha archipelago, near the Sao Pedro and Sao Paulo Islands. Pieces of white debris scattered over five kilometres, which, according to the minister, showed that the plane indeed fell at that site.

There is still no way to determine whether the plane blew up, and there is also no news of survivors, said Jobim.

The objects found at the sea will be taken to the Fernando de Noronha archipelago on a Brazilian naval ship, said Jobim. The minister added that Brazil will be in charge of the recovery of the plane parts, while France will carry out the investigations. Brazilian Navy ships are not expected to arrive in the area until Wednesday morning. Three mercantile ships, which were close to the area, have reached the crash site. The final passengers' list of the plane will be released on Wednesday by Air France, Jobim said. But it will not be complete, he said, as some of the names will be held upon the requests of families and relatives.—Xinhua

Fidel Castro rejects conditions for dialogue with US

HAVANA, 3 June — Former Cuban leader Fidel Castro on Tuesday rejected the conditions placed by US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton for a possible "open dialogue" between Washington and Havana.

In an article entitled "The Clapping and the Silence", published by Cuban media on Tuesday, Castro described Clinton's

Clinton said in El Salvador while attending a meeting of the Organization of American States that Washington would have an "open dialogue" (with Cuba) as soon as there were "changes of Castro said he wondered whether it was necessary for the United States to throw the "humiliating" threat. "What are the democracy and the human rights that the United States defends?" Castro asked.

Anti-pirate task force disarms 10 pirates

DUBAI, 3 June— The international anti-pirate task force patrolling the Gulf of Aden intercepted 10 suspected pirates and disarmed them on Tuesday, said a US Navy statement.

The British frigate HMS Portland intercepted two skiffs filled with 10 men armed with assault rifles and rocket propelled grenades and

"Having prevented this group of pirates from reaching their merchant traffic prey, Portland destroyed one of the skiffs and confiscated all their weapons," said the statement.

The suspected pirates were not detained, however, due to the lack of evidence linking them to a specific criminal act on the high seas, the statement added, though it noted the boats contained extra barrels of fuel, grappling hooks and ammunition.

The Gulf of Aden is one of the world's most important shipping lanes, crossed by 20,000 ships a year, and a prime target for Somali pirates.

Last Latin American nation resumes diplomatic ties with Cuba

HAVANA, 3 June — With the resumption of diplomatic relations with El Salvador on Monday, Cuba now has restored formal ties with all Latin American countries.

El Salvador's move followed the restoration of diplomatic ties between Cuba and Costa Rica in March this year.

The historical agreement on the re-establishment of relations was signed in Salvador, capital of El Salvador, by Salvadorean Foreign Minister Hugo Martinez and Cuban Vice Foreign Minister Alejandro Gonzalez, in the presence of El Salvador's new president Mauricio Funes.

"This is an event that leads El Salvador to reach the level of the times and to surpass its historical debts with Cuba... a step that should have been taken long ago. At no time should the ties with Cuba be interrupted," Martinez said.

Cuban Vice President of the Council of State Esteban Lazo said the event was a victory of the people that had been able to "surpass pressures and threats to make a choice with mind and heart."

With the restoration of ties with Cuba, Funes, who was sworn in as El Salvador's president on Monday, fulfilled a promise during his campaign to renew ties with the Caribbean island nation.

El Salvador severed ties with Cuba in 1961 when the United States pressed countries in the region to cut ties with the island.

Danok Pagoda collapses in Danok Model Village of Dalla Township

NAY PYI TAW, 3 June—Hsandawshin Hsutaungpyae Danok Pagoda in Danok Model Village of Dalla Township was renovated, and the ceremony to enshrine religious objects into the upper reliquary and hoist Seinbudaw (diamond orb) and Hngetmyatnadaw (pennant-shape vane) was held at the pagoda on 7 May.

On 30 May afternoon, the pagoda collapsed while the renovation tasks of the pagoda were being carried out after hoisting the diamond orb and pennant-shape vane atop the pagoda.

The pagoda is 189 feet and nine inches high plus 32 feet high umbrella and 244 feet in circumference. At 3.04 pm, the pagoda above the bell-shape structure collapsed on the northern prayer hall. Due to the collapse, a crack appeared at the remaining part of the pagoda under the bell-shape structure, and the structure of the pagoda remained 50 feet high.

Among the Tatmadawmen and the people who participated in the renovation tasks, two persons died in the incident and 26 Tatmadawmen and eight people were injured. The injured persons were not serious and they are receiving medical treatments at the respective hospitals.

A technician team was formed and they inspected the collapse of the pagoda. The preliminary report of the technicians mentioned that as efforts were made to maintain the original style of the pagoda there became the unexpected over-loads on the main structure, and then the pagoda collapsed. Efforts were made to quickly renovate the pagoda for its completion before the rainy season due to the wishes of the wellwishers. Therefore, the structure of pagoda collapsed due to poor quality of the renovation task at some parts of the pagoda.

Folic acid offers more protection than thought

WASHINGTON, 3 June—Baby-protecting folic acid is getting renewed attention: Not only does it fight spina bifida and some related abnormalities, new research shows it also may prevent premature birth and heart defects.

Now pregnancy specialists are asking if it's time for the government to boost the amount being added to certain foods to help ensure mothers-to-be get enough. But for older adults, there may be a down side to the nutrient: Extra-high levels late in life just might pose a cancer risk. "Folate is assuming the role of a chameleon, if you will," says Dr Joel Mason of Tufts University's nutrition research center, who is researching that possible risk.

Folic acid is an artificial version of folate, a B vitamin found in leafy green vegetables, citrus fruit and dried beans. Everyone needs regular folate because it's important for healthy cell growth yet the body doesn't store up enough of it.—Internet

Singapore confirms 9th Influenza A/H1N1 case

SINGAPORE, 3 June—Singapore has confirmed its 9th case of Influenza A/H1N1, the country's Health Ministry said on Wednesday.

The patient is a 19-year-old Singaporean female studying in the United States who returned for the summer holidays. She arrived in Singapore from New York via Tokyo on All Nippon Airways NH901 on 28 May. She developed symptoms in the morning of 1 June and was sent to local hospital on the same day. Laboratory results confirmed her infection on 2 June.

The ministry said that no flight passengers needed to be quarantined as the case only developed onset of symptoms more than 24 hours after disembarkation, hence she was assessed to be non-infectious during the flight. So far, all the nine cases in Singapore are imported and have a travel history. The Health Ministry said that there is currently no evidence of community spread, adding that it is monitoring the situation closely and will update the public on any new developments.—Internet

Reducing gas emissions has health dividend

BERKELEY, 3 June—Eliminating 10 percent of current gasoline pollutant emissions would have a substantial beneficial impact on US human health, researchers said.

The University of California Berkeley researchers developed a Life Cycle Impact Assessment to measure the benefits on human health that might result from a switch to biofuels.

"While the successful deployment of biofuels requires research to overcome technical barriers, there are other barriers that can often impose constraints more challenging than those related to technical feasibility, including constraints imposed by health risks," researcher Thomas McKone said in a statement. "Just think, if we had done a life cycle impact assessment on the human health effects of gasoline years ago we might not be in the situation we're facing today."

Assessments of the life cycle impacts of emissions from gasoline-run motors in the United States on a county-by-county basis show that the heaviest damage — darkest coloring — is concentrated in urban areas, especially Los Angeles, New York and Chicago. Large urban regions also suffered disproportionate health damage as a result of benzene emissions at service stations and during the transporting by truck of gasoline to service stations, the researchers said.

The findings are being presented at the at the 31st Symposium on Biotechnology for Fuels and Chemicals in San Francisco.—Internet

TV interferes with infants' language development

SEATTLE, 3 June—Television reduces verbal interaction between parents and infants, which could delay children's language development, says a US study that challenges claims that certain infant-targeted DVDs actually benefit youngsters.

The researchers studied 329 children, aged 2 months to 48 months, and found that for each additional hour of television exposure, there was a decrease of 770 words (7 percent) heard from an adult by the children. The study also found that the more hours spent watching television, the fewer vocalizations infants made when adults talked to them. "Some of these reductions are likely due to children being left alone in front of the television screen, but others likely reflect situations in which adults, though present, are distracted by the screen and not interacting with their infant in a discernable manner," wrote Dr Dimitri A Christakis, of Seattle Children's Hospital, and colleagues.—Internet

Obesity, diabetes fuel heart failure risk

NICE, 3 June—The twin epidemics of obesity and type 2 diabetes will fuel an explosion in heart failure, researchers in Scotland suggest.

John McMurray, professor of cardiology at the Western Infirmary in Glasgow, Scotland, said about one-third of patients with heart failure have evidence of diabetes, and for them the outlook is very serious and effective treatment is "very difficult."

McMurray emphasizes obesity is not just associated with an increased risk of heart attack, but also, and especially, with an increased risk of heart failure.

"Obesity is at least as great a risk factor for heart failure as it is for heart attack or stroke," McMurray says in a statement. "Obesity more than doubles the risk."

The pathways by which obesity plays such a role in heart failure are not yet fully understood, but have been shown to have an indirect effect through hypertension, heart attack or diabetes — and a direct effect on the heart muscle itself, McMurray says.

The finding was presented at the Heart Failure Congress in Nice, France.—Internet

Elderly hearing, vocal problems linked

PHOENIX, 3 June—A study of 248 participants with a median age of 82.4 found 11 percent were hard of hearing and had vocal problems, US researchers found.

Researchers at Duke University Medical Center in Durham, NC, said hearing and vocal problems go hand-in-hand among the elderly more frequently than previously thought.

“It’s important to realize these disabilities often occur concurrently,” Dr Seth Cohen, an otolaryngologist at the Duke Voice Care Center, said in a statement. “And when they do, they can increase the likelihood of depression and social isolation.”

Nearly half of people age 65 and older have some degree of hearing loss, a published report said, and about one-third of elderly adults have vocal problems including dysphonia — known as hoarseness. Taken apart, the disabilities have been linked in the elderly to increased depression, anxiety and social isolation.

“When people have trouble hearing, they strain their voices to hear themselves,” Cohen said. “Likewise, people may strain their voices if their communication partners can’t hear.”

Because there is effective treatment for both hearing loss and dysphonia, it’s important that people with one disability be evaluated for the other, Cohen said.

The study was presented at the American Laryngological, Rhinological and Otolological Society in Phoenix.

Obese pregnant women shouldn’t gain weight

NEW YORK, 3 June—The Institute of Medicine has changed its recommendation that overweight women should gain about 15 pounds during pregnancy, a US researchers says.

“It is the mindset of our specialty, and our society, that we need to have round, chubby pregnant women in order make sure they are healthy,” study leader Dr Yvonne S Thornton, a board-certified specialist in maternal-fetal medicine at New York Medical College, says in a statement. “Pregnancy has become a license to eat. We talk about ‘eating for two,’ but it’s really more like eating for one and 1/20th.”

In the study, conducted at several hospitals, the researchers followed 232 obese pregnant women, all of whom had a body mass index of 30 or greater. Half of the women, who acted as a control group, followed conventional pre-natal nutritional guidelines — “eat to appetite.” The other half were placed on a well-balanced, nutritionally monitored programme, which included a daily food diary.

The study, published in the June issue of the Journal of the National Medical Association, found the average weight gain in the control group was 31 pounds, compared to 11 pounds in the study group. Twenty-three extremely obese patients lost weight during their pregnancy.—Internet

British scientists map Antarctic penguins from space

This undated handout photo shows an adult emperor penguin with a baby at an Antarctic breeding colony.—INTERNET

WASHINGTON, 3 June—Penguin poo (guano) stains, visible from space, have helped British scientists locate emperor penguin breeding colonies in Antarctica. Knowing their location provides a baseline for monitoring their response to environmental change, according to a new study published this week in the US journal Global Ecology and Biogeography.

In the new study, scientists from British Antarctic Survey (BAS)-describe how they used satellite images to survey the sea-ice around 90 percent of Antarctica’s coast to search for emperor penguin colonies.

The survey identified a total of 38. Ten of those were new. Of the previously known colonies six had re-located and six were not found.

Because emperor penguins breed on sea-ice during the Antarctic winter little is known about their colonies. Reddish brown patches of guano on the ice, visible in satellite images, provide a reliable indication of their location.

BAS mapping expert Peter Fretwell explains “We can’t see actual penguins on the satellite maps because the resolution isn’t good enough. But during the breeding season the birds stay at a colony for eight months. The ice gets pretty dirty and it’s the guano stains that we can see.”

Emperor penguins spend a large part of their lives at sea.

Skeleton of ancient whale found in Sweden

STROMSTAD, 3 June — The skeleton of a whale thought to be nearly 10,000-years-old has been found underneath a motorway in western Sweden, researchers say. Researchers from Sweden’s Gothenburg University and the Natural History Museum in London are working together to conduct DNA tests on the ancient whale skeleton measuring between 49 and 65 feet, The Local said on Monday.

Gothenburg University said in a statement the skeleton was found by construction workers during work on the E6 motorway in April.

The university said initial details about the discovered whale skeleton indicate the remains could represent a fifth species of right whale.

Currently, only four species of right whales have been identified, the Local reported.

Zoologist Thomas Dahlgren told the newspaper additional tests would need to be conducted on the skeleton to determine its official designation.

“There are previous skeleton finds in western Sweden which are believed to be the Swedenborg right whale.

But to determine the species of whale bones found buried in soil is complicated and it is therefore not yet ascertained whether the whale actually existed,” he said.

Air pollution linked to abdominal pain

EDMONTON, 3 June — Abdominal pain, one of the most common reasons for emergency room visits, may be linked to air pollution, Canadian researchers suggest.

Dr Gilaad Kaplan of the University of Calgary identified more than 95,000 patients discharged from emergency departments with non-specific abdominal pain from hospitals in Edmonton, Alberta. The study was replicated in more than 25,000 abdominal pain patients at a hospital in downtown Montreal. Data from Environment Canada’s National Air Pollution Surveillance were used to determine the hourly levels of ozone, nitrogen dioxide, sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide and particulate matter of varying sizes. The study found nearly two-thirds of visits for non-specific abdominal pain were by women, and the majority of them were ages 15-24. Young women were more likely to present to emergency departments in Edmonton and Montreal for non-specific abdominal pain on days when indicators of air pollution were elevated.

Kaplan and the co-authors speculate that young women are the most affected cohort because they are at increased risk for functional motility disorders — the most common of which is irritable bowel syndrome.—Internet

STETIENNE, 3 June—France coach Raymond Domenech suffered another blow to his authority here on Tuesday as Nigeria beat France 1-0 in an international friendly.

Joseph Akpala scored the only goal of the game, the 22-year-old Club Brugge striker scoring in the 32nd minute after Ikechukwu Uche's shot had come off the bar and hit French goalkeeper Steve Mandanda's heel.

The crowd reacted furiously to the goal and started jeering and booing the French side, who had welcomed back from the international wilderness captain Patrick Vieira and Chelsea's Florent Malouda. However, neither shone with Vieira especially static in midfield on what was a sad 107th appearance for the former Arsenal star.

The hosts failed to rouse their supporters and it took fully an hour for them to even summon up 'Allez les Bleus' (Come on the Blues) as with the exception of Franck Ribery and Nicolas Anelka few of the other players shone.—Internet the number 12-seeded claycourt specialist in what was his first Roland Garros last-eight tie.

The 22-year-old Scot, though, has enjoyed a fantastic year to date, ousting Serbia's Novak Djokovic from the top three in the world rankings following tournament victories in Doha, Rotterdam and Miami. Murray has also impressed on clay - reaching the semi-finals at the Monte Carlo Masters and the quarter-finals in Madrid - and feels his improved showing on the dirt proves that he's becoming a more complete player.—Internet

Ballack signs up for extra year at Chelsea

LONDON, 3 June—Germany captain Michael Ballack has signed up for an extra year at Chelsea, ensuring he will be playing in the Premier League in the run-up to next year's World Cup finals in South Africa.

Ballack moved to London from Bayern Munich in 2006 and has won two FA Cups and a League Cup in his time in the British capital. The 32-year-old said: "I am very happy to be staying at Chelsea for one more year as it was always my intention to play in London at least until the World Cup in 2010.

"We had a fantastic end to the season, winning the FA Cup, and we are all looking forward to taking this success into the new season under Carlo Ancelotti, our new manager." A Chelsea statement added: "Michael has been a key member of our team for three years so we are naturally very happy that we have agreed the extension."—Internet

Valverde named Villarreal coach

MADRID, 3 June—Villarreal on Tuesday named Spain's Ernesto Valverde as coach in place of Manuel Pellegrini, who is taking over at Real Madrid.

Valverde coached Olympiakos last season, but his contract was not renewed with the Greek club despite leading it to the domestic double this year.

Valverde, 45, has previously coached two Primera Liga clubs, Athletic Bilbao and Espanyol Barcelona.

Villarreal, fifth in the championship last season, are to play in the Europa League, formerly the UEFA Cup, in 2009-2010.—Internet

Proud Maria ready for Wimbledon lift-off

PARIS, 3 June—Maria Sharapova shrugged off her devastating French Open hangover on Wednesday and admitted she's come a long way since the dark days of injury misery which sidelined her for 10 months.

The Russian golden girl slumped to one of her heaviest defeats at the hands of Dominika Cibulkova in the Roland Garros quarter-finals, losing 6-0, 6-2.

She also came within a point of suffering only the second 'double-bagel' of her career.

But the former world number one, whose ranking should creep back inside the top 75 after her run to last eight here, insists there are plenty of reasons to be optimistic ahead of Wimbledon, which starts in under three weeks.

"I think this is a very good starting point for me," she said.

"I always say you're only as good as your last tournament. Reflecting back on everything that I've been through in the last year, I think I can sit here and say I'm pretty proud of what I've achieved, not only in this tournament, but in that whole time.—Internet

GM facing difficulties in raising funds in India

NEWDELHI, 3 June—Bankrupt General Motors on Tuesday said it is facing difficulties in raising funds for its under-construction engine transmission plant in India, involving an investment of 200 million US dollars, due to the apprehensions of financial institutions.

The company also said the falling sales of General Motors India, the wholly-owned subsidiary of the US firm, were mainly due to customers' perception on the months-long uncertainty over the future of GM, which finally filed for bankruptcy protection in a New York Court Monday.

"It hasn't been easy in India to raise the money (200 million US dollars). Frankly, we have found difficulties from Indian financial institutions, but we have not given up," GM Group Vice-President Nick Reilly told reporters in a conference call.

"The majority of the fund remains to be raised. It might take us little longer, but the opening of the plant is largely on schedule. It may be delayed by a month or two," he added.

Reilly also said that the company's sales in the past couple of months have been declining in India on account of "customers' perceptions" in view of the uncertainty prevailing in the US market over the parent company's fate.—MNA/PTI
