Naungtaya famous for quality potato and garlic

Naungtaya lies in a plateau amongst high mountain ranges. Its ground goes down slightly from south to north. Mt. Lwemao, the highest part of the town, stands at an altitude of 5920 feet, and Hmwebyin Village, the lowest part, at an altitude of 1920 feet.

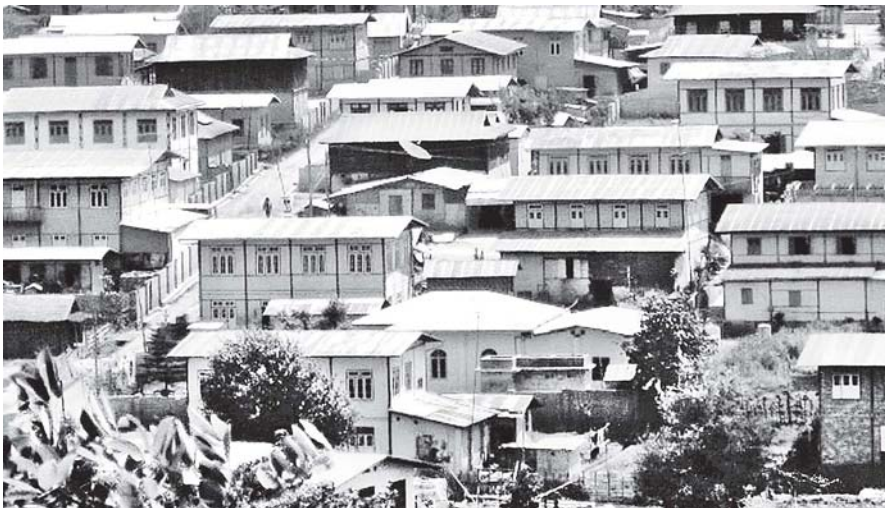

Near Tikyit Village-tract in Naungtaya is a coal-fired power plant under the Ministry of Electric Power-1. Shan Yoma Dragon Co is mining coal from the coal deposits in Tikyit Village-tract and Phayaphyu Village-tract to supply Tikyit Coal-fired Power Plant.

It was in early March on our trip to Naungtaya, and garlic was in season at that time. Harvesting a garlic farm, Shan national Ma Khin Htwe Yee, 24, garlic farmer from Naungtaw Village, said that they sold large garlic for 2500 kyats a viss; medium garlic for 1350 kyats a viss; small garlic for 900 kyats a viss; and single solid clover garlic for 2800 kyats a viss.

Newly-harvested garlic is called wet (green) garlic. The price of garlic depends on its size. Single solid clover garlic is easy to peel off its skin, so it is priced higher than other species of garlic with clovers.

Ma Khin Htwe Yee said, "Garlic farming has been our family business since the time of my grandma. We not only grow garlic but also buy it from other farmers. When we have collected a lot of garlic, we transport it to Aungban for sale. There are many garlic wholesale centers in Aungban. We grow garlic in Tazaungmone (November) and it is in season in Tabaung and Tagu (March and April). Garlic prices have gone up sharply, so garlic farmers make huge profits this year. The gap of garlic prices one year and another is large. We grow groundnut and soya bean after we have harvested garlic."

Hard work, the key to national development

Owing to the road networks and railroad networks covering the whole nation, every region is now accessible from any other region else around the nation at any time.

Minhla-Minbu Railroad Section in Magway Region, part of Kyangin-Pakokku Railroad going in parallel with the river Ayeyawady, was put into service on 18 September. So, the transport of the regions along the facilities is getting smooth.

Road networks as well as railroad networks are being built for ensuring smooth transport of all parts of the nation. Now, the people can travel by car in all seasons from Putao in the northern part to Kawthoung in the southern part of the nation; and from Muse, Lashio and Kengtung in the eastern part to Sittway in the western part of the nation.

Smooth transport is behind not only trade development but also progress in the education, health and social sectors. In addition, it makes substantial contribution to relations among national brethren, thus further strengthening national solidarity.

Adhering to Our Three Main National Causes, the government puts State stability, community peace and national reconsolidation in the centre of national cause. It is in pursuance of the national goal of building a modern, developed nation, dedicating itself to the 12 political, economic and social objectives it has laid down for equitable development of all parts of the Union.

Today, the nation is on the threshold of development as a result of improving infrastructures and making reforms in various sectors. If every citizen works hard and maintain and improves good foundations, the nation will soon be able to keep abreast of other global family members.

NATO helicopter crashes in S Afghanistan, killing nine foreign soldiers

14 Taleban militants killed in Taleban hotbed south Afghanistan

KABUL, 21 Sept— Fourteen Taleban militants were killed after joint Afghan and NATO-led forces patrol repelled insurgents attack on Monday in Taleban hotbed Helmand Province of southern Afghanistan, the NATO-led International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) said in a press release on Tuesday.

"Militants attacked a combined Afghan and coalition forces patrol with small-arms and machine gun fire in the Nad Ali District of Helmand Province yesterday," the press release added.

It said that the joint forces positively identified militants firing positions and responded with small-arms and mortar fire and the force also called for close air support.

"The engagement resulted in 14 militants killed and one wounded," the press release confirmed.

"Initial operational reporting states there were no civilian casualties, it asserted.

However, Taleban militants fighting Afghan and international troops have yet to make comments.

Helmand and the neighbouring Kandahar Province has been regarded as Taleban stronghold in Afghanistan.

Shooter dead after wounding two at Fort Bliss store

FORT BLISS, 21 Sept—A person opened fire Monday at a convenience store on Fort Bliss, injuring two people before being killed by responding officers, the commander of the West Texas Army post said.

Col Joseph A Simonelli Jr declined to discuss the conditions of the victims or other details of the shooting. Simonelli said the area was roped off for an FBI investigation, but the sprawling facility next to El Paso never was under lockdown.

Simonelli says the shooting was reported about 3 pm and authorities responded in about three minutes. He said the post's emergency notification system worked well, sending several messages to his cell phone.

"Our law enforcement agents took it upon themselves to react immediately and aggressively, and I think that's the main reason why this didn't escalate further than it is right now," Simonelli said.

The victims were taken to nearby William Beaumont Army Medical Centre, said post spokesman Dieter Jester.

Space Shuttle Discovery takes one last trip to launch pad

CAPE CANAVERAL, 21 Sept—The space shuttle Discovery is making its last journey to the launch pad Monday, six weeks before the spacecraft is due to lift off on its final mission to space.

Discovery was expected to take six hours to travel atop a massive, Apollo-era crawler transporter from its voluminous assembly building to the seaside Launch Pad 39A here at NASA's Kennedy Space Centre. Hundreds of shuttle workers and their families turned out to cheer the shuttle on during its last launch pad trek.

"This is most likely Discovery's last rollout to the launch pad, so a very momentous occasion for us, but also a very emotional one for a lot of folks," the shuttle's vehicle flow manager Stephanie Stilson told SPACE.com. "There's a lot of excitement, but also a little bit of sadness over the fact that this will probably be the last one."

The shuttle departed at 7:23 pm EDT (2323 GMT), traveling at the blazing speed of 1 mph to traverse the 3.4 miles (5.5 km) between the Vehicle Assembly Building and the launch complex.

NASA sent out more than 700 invitations to shuttle workers so they could bring their families to watch Discovery's rollout from a viewing area located just near the river rock-lined road that the treaded crawler transported followed to the pad.

Discovery is scheduled to lift off on NASA's second-to-last flight of its nearly 30-year space shuttle programme on 1 Nov. The mission will deliver a storage room to the International Space Station (ISS) and a humanoid robot assistant for the outpost's astronaut crew.

NASA is retiring Discovery and its two sister ships, Atlantis and Endeavour, as it shifts into a new space exploration plan aimed at sending astronauts to visit an asteroid and, ultimately, Mars.

Only two more shuttle flights are currently scheduled. Discovery will fly in November followed by Endeavour in February 2011.

Arctic ice in death spiral

UXBRIDGE, 21 Sept—The carbon dioxide emissions from burning fossil fuels have melted the Arctic sea ice to its lowest volume since before the rise of human civilization, dangerously upsetting the energy balance of the entire planet, climate scientists are reporting.

"The Arctic sea ice has reached its four lowest summer extents (area covered) in the last four years," said Mark Serreze, director of the National Snow and Ice Data Centres in the US City of Boulder, Colorado.

The volume - extent and thickness - of ice left in the Arctic likely reached the lowest ever level this month, Serreze told IPS.

"I stand by my previous statements that the Arctic summer sea ice cover is in a death spiral. It's not going to recover," he said.

There can be no recovery because tremendous amounts of extra heat are added every summer to the region as more than 2.5 million square kilometres of the Arctic Ocean have been opened up to the heat of the 24-hour summer sun.—Internet

Droid X users anxiously await Froyo update

NEW YORK, 21 Sept—Another day has dawned and still no official word of the Android 2.2 "Froyo" update for the Motorola Droid X. While the Droid X is a more than capable Android smartphone running Android 2.1, the Froyo update adds features and functions that users want and will put the Droid X on an even playing field with other cutting edge Android devices.

Verizon initially promised to push the update over the air in early September, but now that it is September 20 and no update has been deployed users are left wondering what the new ETA is. Neither Verizon nor Motorola seem willing to commit publicly, but rumors persist that the Froyo update will arrive for Droid X this week.

The original Droid has received the Froyo update, and the Droid 2 shipped with Froyo pre-installed, but the Droid X is still part of the majority of Android smartphones ignored by the latest and greatest version of Android. The lack of Froyo may also be impacting sales of the Droid X, and highlights Android platform fragmentation issues faced by IT admins.

Aside from just wanting to be a part of the in-crowd, Droid X users have good reason to want to join the Froyo party. Froyo comes with significant performance improvements and full support for Adobe Flash and Adobe Air. Android 2.2 also has both data tethering and mobile hotspot capabilities—both features that already exist on some Android devices that have been rooted, and may or may not actually be available without rooting depending on the wireless carrier.—Internet

$399 HP printer comes with detachable, 7-inch Android tablet

WASHINGTON, 21 Sept—we've seen plenty of wireless printers with fancy touchscreen panels before, but the latest printer from HP is the first I've heard of to come with its very own Android tablet.

If the concept behind the PhotoSmart eStation All-in-One sounds a tad familiar, perhaps it's because you've been reading about the rumored HP eStation Zeen, the printer-friendly tablet that got outed by the Federal Communications Commission last month.

Well, it looks like the Zeen has morphed into the 7-inch, Android 2.1-powered tablet that comes bundled with the PhotoSmart eStation, the $399 wireless multifunction printer that HP announced Monday at a swank New York news conference (which featured, among other luminaries, the one and only Ivanka Trump—go figure).

The Wi-Fi-enabled eStation boasts full-on printing (33 pages per minute for black and white, 32 ppm for color), flatbed scanning, copying and faxing, as well as the ability to connect to your local wireless network for remote printing.

So far, so hum—but it's the eStation's detachable 7-inch panel that caught my eye, which runs on Android 2.1 and comes with a series of widgets from HP (natch), Yahoo! (home of the blog you're reading right now), Facebook and Snapfish.

HP is selling the bundled tablet as an easy way to get quick news and weather updates, or print pages from the Web or online photos without having to fire up your PC.—Internet

Flip Video cameras vs iOS devices: Spec Showdown

New York, 21 sept—Cisco announced four new Flip video cameras on Monday that bring high-definition video recording to every single device in the Flip line-up. table. All four cameras—the Flip UltraHD 4GB/8GB and Flip MinoHD 4GB/8GB—now record 720p HD video. Despite the never-ending stream of multifunction devices, Cisco's Flip cameras (Cisco bought Flip-maker, Pure Digital Technologies in 2009) continue to be popular. The company hasn't announced unit sales, but Cisco recently reported that it sold about $75 million worth of Flip video cameras between February and May 2010. But how much longer can Flip cameras stand up against smartphones and other multifunction devices that include steadily improving cameras? If you're just looking for 720p video, for example, you can already find that functionality on the iPhone 4 and iPod Touch, as well as the Android-based Droid X and all three of Nokia's new Symbian^3 devices. Plus, smartphones give you increased functionality such as telephony, gaming, productivity apps, and Internet access. Flip cameras are still packing some features that multifunction devices can't compete with yet, such as the video capture frame rate. The iPhone 4 and iPod Touch, for example, offer only 30 frames per second (fps), while all but one of the Flip devices (the 4G UltraHD) have 60 fps.

Increase in seizures seen in kids with H1N1 flu

New York, 21 Sept—Children made ill by the 2009 pandemic H1N1 swine flu virus suffered more seizures and other nervous system problems than those with seasonal flu, a new report reveals.

In the study, published in the September issue of the journal Annals of Neurology, researchers compared neurological complications in 303 children (younger than 19 years) who were hospitalized with H1N1 and 234 children hospitalized with seasonal flu.

Among the 303 youngsters with H1N1, 18 children most of whom had underlying nerve-related conditions — experienced neurological complications. The most common neurologic symptoms were seizures (67 percent) and encephalopathy (50 percent), a brain disorder that can range from mild to serious and potentially fatal.

More than half of the children with seizures arrived at the hospital in a life-threatening state called status epilepticus, where seizure activity occurs continuously for more than five to 30 minutes, the University of Utah researchers explained.

Alzheimer's brain tangles offer clue to worsening

WASHINGTON, 21 Sept—That sticky gunk coating Alzheimer's patients' brains gets all the notoriety, but another culprit is gaining renewed attention: Protein tangles that clog brain cells and just might determine how fast patients go downhill. Nobody knows what causes Alzheimer's, although the disease's hallmark plaque — that gooey stuff called beta-amyloid — is the main suspect. Yet repeated attempts at anti-amyloid treatments have failed, the latest disappointment last month when Eli Lilly & Co. abandoned an experimental drug that wound up doing harm, not good. Now comes a different clue: A second protein called tau seems to signal how aggressive the mind-robbing disease will be. Researchers discovered that patients with mild Alzheimer's and high levels of tau also harbored a genetic alteration that in turn predicted they would worsen faster.—Internet

A new study shows how we can prevent some cases of PTSD

WASHINGTON, 21 Sept—We barely know how to treat mental illnesses, so it's difficult to figure out how to prevent them in the first place. But as I wrote at some length last year, research into stopping breakdowns before they occur has advanced dramatically in the past few years. Now comes news of a method that can keep patients who have experienced trauma from developing posttraumatic stress disorder, or PTSD, before it even starts.

The paper published last week in the journal Critical Care looked at 352 patients in intensive-care units. If you make it out of an ICU alive, you often develop mental problems. Many former ICU patients can't quite remember all the procedures done to keep them alive; some of those procedures recur to the recovering patients in awful flashbacks. "These memories are frequently described by patients as very vivid, realistic and frightening," write the authors of the new paper, a European team led by Christina Jones and Richard Griffiths of the University of Liverpool in the UK. Sometimes, the team writes, ICU patients become convinced that nurses and doctors were trying to kill them.—Internet

Lennar returns to profit in 3Q and shares soar

LOS ANGELES, 21 Sept—Lennar Corp returned to a profitable third quarter Monday as strong completed sales helped drive a 14 percent jump in revenue and the homebuilder's construction costs declined.

But the absence of federal homebuyer tax credits sapped demand in the June-August period and new home orders fell 15 percent.

President and CEO Stuart Miller said June was the slowest month of the quarter, while July and August were "a little less horrible."

"It's been a tough summer," Miller said. "As we've gone into September, we're seeing a little bit of pickup in our traffic, but that shouldn't be cause to have a sigh of relief at

Lennar and other homebuilders enjoyed a bump in sales this spring as affordable prices, low mortgage rates and two federal tax credits lured homebuyers into the market. Since the tax credits expired at the end of April, the number of people looking to buy has dropped. Even the lowest mortgage rates in decades have failed to push sales.

The biggest hurdle remains uncertainty over any economic recovery with the country's unemployment hovering near 10 percent.

Oil and dollar slip as markets wait for Fed

SINGAPORE, 21 Sept—The dollar hovered near a five-week low on Tuesday and oil eased as traders positioned for a Federal Reserve policy meeting later that may discuss whether the fragile US economy needs a fresh infusion of cash.

Few market players expect the Fed to make further easing moves just yet — and the dollar could gain if that view plays out — but it is seen as much more likely that it will signal its readiness to act if necessary. Asian shares edged up after a positive lead from Wall Street, where optimistic corporate news from the likes of IBM (IBM.N) had pushed the S&P 500 (.SPX) to a four-month closing high. (.N) Japan's Nikkei (.N225) rose 0.4 percent to a seven-week high, although worries remained that the yen — whose recent strength is a big problem for the export-led economy — could spike again despite last week's intervention to curb it by the authorities. Less invasive surgery OK for breast cancer

LONDON, 21 Sept—Some breast cancer patients may do just as well with a less invasive surgery to remove selected lymph nodes rather than the aggressive operation normally used to remove them all, a new study says.

In the biggest trial yet to compare the two procedures, North American researchers found early breast cancer patients don't need the more interventionist surgery to live longer.

Most patients with such cancer have surgery to remove the disease. Doctors sometimes decide to get rid of all the lymph nodes to better control the cancer because if the disease spreads, it usually goes first to the nearby lymph nodes.

Experts also think there is a relationship between the number of lymph nodes affected and how aggressive a cancer is.

But the invasive operation, an axillary-lymph node dissection, often comes with nasty side effects like nerve damage and reduced use of the arms and shoulders.

Doctors can use another surgery to remove only the first set of lymph nodes, or the sentinel lymph nodes under the arm, but many physicians have assumed the more aggressive surgery gives women a better shot at staying alive.

The study dealt only with victims of early breast cancer, not women needing a mastectomy.

Shifting to green economy can hasten development, says UN report

UNITD NATIONS, 21 Sept—Intensifying investments in clean energy can accelerate the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) said in a new publication on Monday. A "green economy" is one that "not only improves human well-being and lessens inequality but also reduces environmental risks and ecological scarcities," the brief says, underscoring its importance in realizing the MDGs.

In 2008 amidst the global financial crisis, the UNEP launched its Green Economy Initiative, which seeks to demonstrate how to revive economies and create lasting jobs while simultaneously addressing environmental challenges.

"There is rapidly-growing evidence that accelerating a transition to a low-carbon, resource-efficient, employment generating Green Economy may not only be the key to meeting sustainability challenges of the 21st century, but also provide a considerable contribution to meeting the other MDGs," said UNEP Executive Director Achim Steiner.—Xinhua

Typhoon Fanapi brings worst rains in a century to south China Province

GUANGZHOU, 21 Sept—Typhoon Fanapi, the 11th and strongest typhoon to hit China this year, has brought the heaviest rains in a century to the southern Guangdong Province, triggering landslides in some cities.

Fanapi, which landed in coastal Fujian Province, southeast China on Monday, wreaked havoc in Fujian and Guangdong before it weakened into a low pressure system at 5 am Tuesday.

The typhoon packed torrential rain in most parts of Guangdong Province in the 24 hours from 9 am Monday to 9 am Tuesday. The average precipitation topped 100 millimetres, the worst in 100 years, the provincial weather bureau said in a statement.

Thunderstorm strands thousands at SW China airport

CHENGDU, 21 Sept—More than 10,000 passengers were stranded at an airport in southwest China's Sichuan Province after 20 hours of thunderstorms, airport authorities said Tuesday.

Thunderstorms began to hit the provincial capital Chengdu at 8 pm Monday and stopped at 5 am Tuesday but then started again at 8 am.

The city's weather bureau recorded 359 lightning strikes in the two hours between 7 pm and 9 pm.

There was still no letup in the storms by 3 pm Tuesday, said an official at Shuangliu International Airport, which is located in the suburbs of Chengdu.

Over the past 20 hours, five incoming flights were forced to return to their airport of origin while 28 flights were diverted to neighboring cities, he said.

At least 10 flights were canceled and more than 100 postponed. The situation is likely to worsen, as the weather bureau has forecast more rain for Tuesday

The stormy weather has caused chaos at Shuangliu International Airport, which handles about 600 takeoffs and landings per day.

The thunderstorms and delayed or canceled flights have also affected holidaymakers' plans for the Mid-Autumn Festival, an important Chinese holiday that falls on Wednesday.

Hurricane Karl death toll rises to 12 in Mexico

MEXICO CITY, 21 Sept—Death toll caused by Hurricane Karl rose to 12 on Monday, President Felipe Calderon told a press conference on Monday.

The hurricane, which came onshore in eastern coast of the country's state Veracruz on Friday, has caused rivers in the eastern part of the country to overflow.

Calderon promised to continue dredging work to reduce the water levels in Veracruz and to conduct repairs.

"The rivers in the region are all above their historical levels. They must be reduced a little at a time. We are going to implement dredging works so that the reduction can be speeded up," he said.

Calderon gave the speech in Veracruz, where he was visiting to view the damage. Authorities there had previously reported 500,000 affected, including nine deaths and 100,000 evacuated from their homes.

Calderon also said several main roads were damaged.

"The most urgent work is removing mudslides and repairing the drainage. We will ask people to do short term work including cleaning-up," Calderon said.

WELLINGTON, 21 Sept—Canterbury University students are back in class on Monday, two weeks after being closed due to the 7.1 magnitude earthquake on 4 Sept.

Some lectures will have to be reorganized, and exam timetables are to be compressed. A study break is also shortened for reducing the impact of the quake.

One of the biggest problems is that students can't use the main library until the end of the year due to the collapse of book stacks.

But the University said it had negotiated e-services for having access to one of the largest amount of online materials in the world.

Twelve academic publishers have granted special free access to e-publications so students can still get information electronically and by interloan.

Vice-chancellor of Canterbury University, Rod Carr, said steps had been taken to make sure students not miss out.

Six mln people participate in earthquake drill in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY, 21 Sept—About 6 million people participated on Monday in an earthquake drill in Mexico City after the 25th anniversary of the quake that killed thousands of people in the Mexican capital.

The drill began at 11:01 am local time (1601 GMT) with an alarm rang over the city. It covered 7,000 buildings including Torre del Caballito, a landmark building of Mexico City.

After the alarm, the people were directed to the safe areas. A police named Jose Carmona told Xinhua that they used about 9 minutes to evacuate the people in Torre Caballito. "The building has 31 floors, so 9 minutes is a reasonable time," he said.

According to Carmona, after the 1985 earthquake in Mexico City, the government established an earthquake prevention mechanism including at least two drills annually.

Jaime Cedillo a drill volunteer in Torre del Caballito, told Xinhua that "the earthquake in 1985 remains fresh in our memories, despite it has passed 25 years. We still have many things to learn."

Study links childhood obesity to adenovirus 36

BEIJING, 21 Sept— There exists a possible link between virus and childhood obesity, said a new study in the online journal Pediatrics on Monday.

The results come against the childhood obesity talks that generally focus on food intake, exercise or genetics. The study shows that youngsters who were infected by adenovirus 36 were an average of 22.5 kg heavier than children who hadn't been exposed to the virus.

Adenovirus 36 causes the common cold and slight gastrointestinal upset.

Among 124 children aged 8 to 18 in the study, nearly 80 percent of those who had been exposed to the virus were obese, said researcher Dr Jeffrey B Schwimmer, associate professor of clinical pediatrics at the University of California, San Diego.

First identified in the 1980s, the virus may affect obesity by infecting "pre-fat" cells — cells that have the ability to store fat in the body and cause them to mature more quickly, Schwimmer said.

It may also inhibit the cells' ability to break down fat, so fat cells become greater in both number and size.

During the past three decades, the prevalence of obesity among young people has tripled, reaching 17 percent in the US, according to data from the Centres for Disease Control and Prevention.

Ban Ki-moon says UN millennium goals 'can be met'

LONDON, 21 Sept—The Millennium Development

Goals can still be met if enough work is done, the UN secretary general has said. Ban Ki-moon urged world leaders meeting in New York to stick to the task despite the global downturn, insisting they could be achieved by 2015.

But French President Nicolas Sarkozy said new funds had to be found to meet the goals - suggesting a tax be imposed on financial transactions.

More than 140 leaders are meeting to review progress toward the targets.

Created in 2000, the eight goals aim to reduce poverty and hunger and improve health standards around the world.

The UN itself concedes that it will be difficult, if not impossible, to meet some of the targets.

In his opening speech to delegates, Mr Ban insisted the goals had led to "more development success stories than ever before", and had had a "transformative impact".

Children's pocket money falls to 7-year low

British children's weekly pocket money has fallen to a seven-year low, in a sign parents are still cutting back on non-essential spending even as the country emerges from recession, a survey showed Monday.

Halifax, part of Lloyds Banking Group, said average pocket money fell to 5.89 pounds ($9.23) a week in 2010 from 6.24 pounds in 2009. The new figure is the lowest weekly sum since 2003 when parents paid an average of 5.79 pounds.

Children's pocket money has fallen despite a small rise in their parents' wages over the past year. Average weekly pay in Britain in the three months to July was 431 pounds excluding bonuses, 1.8 percent more than a year earlier.

Parents paid daughters less pocket money than sons, in a parallel to the gender gap in the earnings of grownups.

Hitler's car gift to Nepal king to be used again

A car said to have been a gift from Adolf Hitler to a Nepali king will be repaired and used to drive visitors around the grounds of a palace museum, a government official said. The 1939 Mercedes Benz was presented by the Nazi leader to King Tribhuvan, grandfather of Nepal's last King Gyanendra, deposed two years ago.

It has been stored at an old palace garage for more than five years, after being abandoned by an engineering college that had been using it for classes.

Jimmy the painting chimp draws hordes to Rio zoo

A retired circus chimpanzee is the Cezanne of simians, drawing crowds to a Brazilian zoo to watch him paint. The 26-year-old chimp called Jimmy has been producing surprisingly lovely paintings each day for three weeks at the Niteroi Zoo.

Trainer Roched Seba said on Monday Jimmy doesn't like the toys and other diversions that other chimps enjoy. So three weeks ago, Seba introduced him to painting after reading about animals in zoos elsewhere that enjoyed a little canvas time.

Temperamental as great artists can be, Jimmy at times declines to paint if his cage is surrounded by too many gawkers.

But for at least 30 minutes a day, he carefully dips his brush into plastic paint containers and uses broad, bold strokes to create his art.

Tbilisians sweep top three places in 2010 Miss Georgia contest

BATUMI, 21 Sept—Contestants from Tbilisi on Monday swept the top three places of the 2010 version of the Miss Georgia beauty contest, with 20-year-old Dea Arakishvili taking the crown.

Eka Ruztskaya, 24, and Nata Bakhtadze, 19, finished as the second and third runners-up.

The South Caucasus country started its annual beauty pageant in 2003 and is aiming high at international beauty contests. Local pundits claimed that the high aim was probably behind the choice of Tbilisians for this year's top finishes among the 23 finalists in Monday's finale.

The Tbilisian contestants speak better English than the provincial contestants, though the country has started a drive to popularize English in the country. The government of Georgia has started to invite up to 1,000 native English speakers to teach English in the regions of the country, especially in the western regions where tourism is key to local development.—Xinhua

Edel interviewed by police over fraud claims

Paris Saint-Germain's goalkeeper Apoula Edina Edel, seen here in May 2010, was interviewed by police.

INTERNET

PARIS, 21 Sept — Paris Saint-Germain goalkeeper Apoula Edel was on Monday interviewed by police as part of an investigation into claims he lied about his age and real identity.

Police sources revealed that Edel was questioned as a witness following a complaint made by his former coach and agent Nicolas Philibert, who alleges that he is owed 30,000 euros in unpaid debts.

Edel was quizzed at a police station in Poissy in the Paris suburbs and left late on Monday afternoon without speaking to reporters.

The goalkeeper first hit the headlines last year when Philibert, who says he coached the player in Cameroon, claimed Edel was 29 rather than 24 and was actually called Ambroise Beyamena.

French sport weekly Le 10 Sport on Friday published documents accusing Edel of lying about his age and identity, which were handed to the authorities by Philibert.

Mourinho closes door on Portugal coaching job

MADRID, 21 Sept — Jose Mourinho has closed the door on any possibility that he will take temporary charge of the Portuguese national team for two Euro 2012 qualifiers next month, saying the "issue is closed".

"Being Portuguese I am always available to talk about the team, (but) as a coach the issue is closed and I don't want to talk about it any more," he told a news conference on Monday.

Coach-less Portugal have made a poor start to their Euro 2012 qualifying bid, drawing 4-4 with Cyprus and losing 1-0 to Norway.

Portugal had asked if Mourinho could take the reins for the next two qualifiers, following the dismissal of previous coach Carlos Queiroz, only for his club Real Madrid to block the move.

UN chief sees MDGs achievable, calls on world leaders to keep promise

UNITED NATIONS, 21 Sept—UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said here Monday that the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) “are achievable” by its deadline of 2015, calling on world leaders to exercising political leadership and keep their promise to translate the eight MDGs targets into a reality. The secretary-general made the statement as he opened a high-level meeting on the MDGs, which opened here to get a better idea of where the world is standing — the gaps and gains in the world efforts to reach the MDGs targets and what works and what doesn’t in the process.

The MDGs, endorsed by world leaders in September 2000, set out eight targets which range from halving extreme poverty to halting the spread of HIV/AIDS and providing universal primary education, all by the target date of 2015.—Xinhua

Iraq finds hundreds of missing artefacts

BAGHDAD, 21 Sept—The Iraqi National Museum has found more than 600 missing artefacts stashed away in a storeroom of the Prime Minister’s office, two years after the US Government returned them to Iraq, officials said on Monday.

Most of the artefacts were among some 15,000 relics looted during the chaos that followed the 2003 US-led invasion that ousted dictator Saddam Hussein.

The 638 pieces were recovered, handed over to the Premier’s office, and promptly lost again, officials said.

“We found these artefacts in one of the storerooms of the Prime Minister’s office along with some kitchen appliances. When we opened the boxes we found them,” Qahtan al-Jibouri, Iraq’s Minister of Tourism and Antiquities, said.

Iraq, regarded by some historians as the cradle of civilization, lost part of its national heritage to widespread looting that became a powerful symbol of the breakdown of order following the 2003 invasion.

Two weeks ago, Iraqi officials announced they had recovered more than 500 other artefacts, including the headless statue of Sumerian king Entemena and a chrome-plated AK-47 that belonged to Saddam.
