Twin blasts kill five at market south of Baghdad

BAGHDAD, 8 Oct—B a c k - t o - b a c k bombings at a vegetable market south of Baghdad on Thursday afternoon killed at least five people, including a policeman who was searching for explosives, Iraqi security and medical officials said.

The blasts in Iskandariyah, about 30 miles (50 kilometres) south of Baghdad, also wounded at least 20 people, according to Dr Nahid al-Maamouri of the Iskandariyah Hospital.

The first explosion came around 4:45 pm, during the busy afternoon shopping hours ahead of the weekend. The second bomb hit about five minutes later, witnesses said, as people rushed to the attack scene to help.

I s k a n d a r i y a h police said an explosives detector, held by a policeman just inside the small market's only entrance, had failed to find the bombs before they went off. The policeman was also killed in the blast, said a police official who spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not allowed to talk to the media.

The area was once controlled by Sunni militants, who have been waging sporadic attacks in an apparent effort to reassert their influence in former strongholds.

Nearby, gunmen killed a member of a Sunni militia formed to battle militants just hours earlier on Thursday.

Poverty rises in suburbs, help lags

WASHINGTON, 8 Oct—Poverty has increased in the suburbs of US cities in the last decade, but public services to the poor have not kept pace, according to a report by the Brookings Institution on Thursday.

The recession that began at the end of 2007 "exacerbated this gap," the liberal-leaning think tank said, adding that almost three-quarters of non-profit assistance groups in the suburbs "are seeing more clients with no previous connection to safety net programmes."

There are few social service organizations outside of cities and public agencies frequently have to stretch their help across large geographic areas, according to the report.

In 1999, cities and their suburbs had roughly equal numbers of poor residents, but by 2008 the number of suburban poor exceeded that of urban poor by 1.5 million.

"Although poverty rates remain higher in central cities than in suburbs (18.2 percent versus 9.5 percent in 2008), poverty rates have increased at a quicker pace in suburban areas," Brookings said.—Reuters

Gunmen kill four police in Iran's Kurdish Area

TEHRAN, 8 Oct—A pair of gunmen opened fire on a police patrol in Iran's Kurdish Region on Thursday, killing four officers and a bystander, the Iranian official news agency reported.

The attack took place in Sanandaj, the capital of Iran's Kurdistan Province some 310 miles (500 kilometres) west of Teheran, where authorities have been battling a separatist Kurdish movement for years.

"In this terrorist incident five were killed including four policemen and a pedestrian," Col Ebrahim Kazeminejad, the provincial deputy police chief told the IRNA news agency.

The two gunmen were members of "counterrevolutionary groups" he said and added that they were using Kalashnikov rifles.

Five other policemen and four civilians were wounded in the attack, one of them in serious condition.

Efforts were under way to apprehend the gunmen, he said.

No group immediately claimed responsibility for the attack.

Alleged suicide bombs kill eight in Pakistan

KARACHI, 8 Oct—Two suspected suicide bombers have attacked the most beloved Sufi shrine in Pakistan's largest city, killing at least eight people, wounding 65 others, and sending a stark reminder of the threat posed by militants to this US-allied nation. Angry mobs burned tires and torched buses in the aftermath of the bombings in Karachi late Thursday.

The attack came amid tensions between Washington and Islamabad over NATO helicopter incursions that have led Pakistan to close a key border crossing used to ferry supplies to Western troops in Afghanistan. Despite US apologies over the incursions, one of which left two Pakistani soldiers dead, Islamabad said Thursday it had yet to decide when to reopen the crossing. The explosions at the Abdullah Shah Ghazi shrine in southern port city of Karachi happened at the busiest time of the week when thousands typically visit to pray, distribute food to the poor and toss rose petals on the grave of the saint. The dead included two children.

Ghazi was an 8th century saint credited with bringing Islam to the region along the coast. Local legend has it that his shrine protects Karachi from cyclones and other sea-related disasters. Pakistani Sufi sites have frequently been the target of Islamist militant groups, whose hardline interpretations of the religion leave no room for the more mystical Sufi practices that are common in this Sunni Muslim-majority nation of 175 million.

BAIKONUR, 8 Oct—A newly modernised Russian Soyuz rocket carrying three astronauts to the International Space Station blasted off Friday from Russia's Baikonur cosmodrome in Kazakhstan.

The rocket, carrying two Russians and an American, took off into the night sky on schedule at 3:11 am Moscow time (23:11 GMT Thursday).

Russian space officials said the launch had gone according to plan and the craft successfully went into orbit.

Russian spy Anna Chapman made a rare public appearance before the lift-off. Dressed in a scarlet

The glamorous auburn-haired Chapman was at the centre of the biggest spy crisis between the United States and Russia since the Cold War as one of the US-based "sleeper" agents who in July were exchanged in a dramatic spy swap.

Since her arrival back in Moscow she has posed in cocktail dresses for a weekly magazine and appeared at a party at a nightclub, but has not given any interviews about her experience. The Soyuz TMA-M spacecraft is a modernised version of the ship used by Russia to put humans into the space. It is the first such craft to be fully equipped with a digital measuring system and Friday's launch was the first time the new design has been used.

Little-known shark species gets a closer look

DUBLIN, 8 Oct—A tiny, little-understood shark species that lives off the coast of Ireland has garnered more attention lately from a scientist who spent four years getting to know the wee creatures.

The sharks grow to 3.3 feet (about 1 metre) in length, can weigh up to 26 pounds (12 kilograms) and each summer they swarm into the shallow waters off the Irish east coast. Yet until researchers at University College Dublin undertook a project to study them, the starry smooth-hound was a mystery.

As part of his PhD project, Edward Farrell, a recent graduate from University College Dublin School of Biology & Environmental Science successfully investigated the age, growth, reproduction and identification of these animals.

"It's amazing how little was known about this species considering their size and abundance on the East Coast," Farrell said. "Until recently we weren't even sure what species we were dealing with, but we developed a genetic method which allowed us to confirm that it is the starry smooth-hound which occurs in Irish waters and not the related common smooth-hound." Starry smooth-hounds were previously considered to be a fast-growing and early-maturing species. However, the results of the four-year project have revealed that starry smooth-hounds in Irish waters actually grow twice as slowly as previously estimated and only reproduce every two years rather than annually as is the case for their counterparts in the Mediterranean.

Technology

Technology brings connection, stress

WASHINGTON, 8 Oct—Technology has become so entwined with college students' often frantic lives that most in a new survey say they'd be more frazzled without it.

Yet The Associated Press-mtvU Poll, released Thursday, also found that being perpetually connected comes at a cost. While 57 percent of students said life without computers and cell phones would make them more stressed, a significant number — 25 percent — said it would be a relief. A big majority feel pressured to instantly answer texts or voice mails, most get nervous if someone doesn't immediately reply to a message, and nearly half worry whether messages they get are jokes.

"If you're without it, you're disconnected," Megan Earley, 20, a junior at Mount St Mary's University in Emmitsburg,

Md, said of technology. "You feel like it's a lifeline."

The Internet's central role for many students was underscored last month when Tyler Clementi, a Rutgers University freshman, leaped to his death from the George Washington Bridge after others secretly webcast his sexual encounter with another man. News reports said Clementi left a note on his Facebook page reading, "Jumping off the gw bridge sorry."—Internet

UAE says BlackBerry dispute resolved before deadline

DUBAI, 8 Oct—The United Arab Emirates will not suspend BlackBerry services on 11 October after resolving a dispute with its Canadian maker Research in Motion over access to email and other data, state news WAM agency said on Friday.

The UAE had said it would suspend BlackBerry Messenger, email and web browser services to about 500,000 subscribers from 11 October unless Canadian BlackBerry maker RIM works out a way to locate encrypted servers in the country, so that the government can seek access to messages.

"The Telecommunications Regulatory Authority (TRA) has confirmed that Blackberry services are now compliant with the UAE's telecommunications regulatory framework," a statement on WAM said.

"Therefore all Blackberry services in the UAE will continue to operate as normal and no suspension of service will occur on 11 October, 2010," it said. Saudi Arabia and India also threatened to cut off services but have reached an agreement with RIM, and an UAE official said in September the country was "very optimistic" about reaching a deal before the 11 October deadline. Before the dispute, information sent to and from BlackBerry devices had been encrypted and handled by servers outside the UAE.

They also say it can help stars stay healthier, pointing to Robert De Niro, who famously gained 60 pounds for his role in "Raging Bull."

Obese workers cost US 73-bln dlrs a year

WASHINGTON, 8 Oct—Obese workers cost US employers 73.1-billion dollars a year, much of it due to “presenteeism,” or being less productive on the job due to health problems, a study published Friday shows.

The dollar sum lost is the “equivalent of hiring 1.8 million workers a year at 42,000 dollars each, which is roughly the average annual wage of US workers,” found the study led by Eric Finkelstein, deputy director for health services and systems research at Duke-National University of Singapore.

Finkelstein and his team of researchers tallied medical expenditures, presenteeism and absence from work to put a dollar figure on the per capita cost of obesity among full-time US workers.

Health Tip: Living with Psoriasis

Psoriasis is a skin condition that occurs when immature skin cells rise too quickly above the surface of the skin. This leads to symptoms including patches of thick, red skin that itch or feel sore.

The National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases describes how psoriasis can impact a person’s quality of life:

- It can cause pain and discomfort, and in some cases, disability.
- It can interfere with simple tasks such as sleeping, walking and taking care of yourself.
- It can lead to emotional problems, including lack of self-confidence.
- If psychological distress is serious enough, it can trigger self-isolation and depression.—Internet

Many Americans plan to skip flu shot this year

WASHINGTON, 8 Oct—Although vaccination against influenza can protect people from illness and help prevent the spread of flu, many Americans say they and their children won’t be getting a shot this coming season, new surveys reveal.

Despite the attention surrounding last year’s outbreak of H1N1 flu, 43 percent of Americans say they will not be getting the vaccine this fall, according to a survey from the National Foundation for Infectious Diseases (NFID).

Another survey from the same group found a third of American mothers saying they have no plans to get a flu shot for their children.

Those decisions could come back to haunt

Americans, experts said.

“Flu is serious. Every year millions of people get sick; more than 200,000 people are hospitalized and thousands of people die from influenza,” Dr Thomas R Frieden, director of the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, said during a Thursday morning press conference. In keeping with CDC guidelines, “everyone over the age of 6 months should get a flu shot,” he said. Flu vaccination remains the best way to protect yourself against the illness, Frieden added. “There is plenty of vaccine available,” he said. “This year we think that the three strains of influenza in the flu vaccine are going to be excellent matches with the flu that’s circulating.”

Mobile and ‘cloud’ computing key future job skills

SAN FRANCISCO, 8 Oct—US technology titan IBM says the job skills of the future include savvy with smartphones, tablet computers and software hosted in the Internet “cloud” rather than standard desktop computers. IBM Tech Trends Survey results being released Friday show that a majority of business technology specialists expect that by 2015 more business software will be made for smartphones and tablet computers than for traditional office systems.

And some 91 percent of the 2,000 respondents from 87 countries agreed that within five years it will be more popular for companies to use programs offered online as services than for firms to manage in-house computer networks.

“I think the social implications are going to be huge,” IBM vice president of alliances Mark Hanny said while discussing the survey findings with AFP. “It is important for people to embrace technology; it is a key deterrent in all kinds of professions.” From medicine to media and beyond, needed job skills will include mastering software applications on the booming array of mobile gadgets linked to the Internet, according to Hanny.

German exports fall for second month running

FRANKFURT, 8 Oct—German exports declined in August by 0.4 percent from the previous month, official data showed on Friday, the second consecutive month that Europe’s biggest economy has shipped fewer goods abroad.

The value of exports from Germany, the world’s second biggest exporter after China, came to 81.8 billion euros (113.7 billion dollars), the federal statistics office said.

Seasonally- and calendar-adjusted figures provided by the Destatis office also showed that German imports increased by 0.9 percent to 70.1 billion euros.

The unadjusted German trade surplus dropped to nine billion euros from 13.5 billion in July, and the current account surplus was nearly half the July figure at 4.6 billion euros in August.

Economists polled by Dow Jones Newswires had forecast a much stronger trade surplus of 12.6 billion euros.—Internet

Consumers cut credit card borrowing for 24th month

WASHINGTON, 8 Oct—Consumer borrowing fell again in August as consumers cut back on credit card use for the 24th consecutive month, the Federal Reserve said Thursday.

Borrowing by consumers declined by $3.3 billion that month. It was the 18th drop for overall consumer borrowing in the past 19 months.

Americans are borrowing and spending less as they face widespread unemployment and uncertainty about their financial futures. The reduced use of credit by consumers is a drag on the recovery, which has yet to show a sustained rebound.

Households are struggling to repair their personal balance sheets after the worst recession since the 1930s. The home foreclosure crisis is grim evidence that excessive borrowing can upend people’s lives.

Another cause of the decline in credit is banks’ slow recognition that many debts will not be repaid. Banks gave up on $42.5 billion in credit card debt in the first half of 2010, according an analysis by the website CardHub.com.

Seals help map ocean floor

SANTA CRUZ, 8 Oct—Seals diving deep in the ocean for food near Antarctica are helping provide extremely accurate data for use in mapping the sea floor, oceanographers say.

Seals, walruses, whales and other large marine creatures have helped oceanographers before, as scientists have glued sensors to the animals' bodies that measures factors like temperature and salinity. Science-News.org reported.

The new work with elephant seals is the first to extract information on the shape of the seafloor known as bathymetry from new sensors, glued to the animals' heads, which can measure pressure and hence depth. "You can actually map the ocean floor," Daniel Costa, a marine biologist at the University of California, Santa Cruz, says.

The data came from 57 elephant seals tagged by Costa's group during five summers at the US Antarctic Marine Living Resources camp in the South Shetland Islands.—Internet

Facebook Groups dinged for drafting members

SAN FRANCISCO, 8 Oct—Facebook on Thursday was getting kudos for giving members better control of their information but dinged for letting people be thrown into "groups" without their permission.

A day after the world's most popular online social network began letting users form cozy cliques at the website the Internet was abuzz with grumblings by people who found themselves added to groups without being asked.

Well-known technology entrepreneur and blogger Jason Calcanis posted at his website a copy of an email that he sent to Facebook after being "force-joined" to a group called the "North American Man/Boy Love Association" (NAMBLA). "There is no opt-in," Calcanis complained, noting that he is not and has no interest in being a NAMBLA member. "I've now been assigned to a group that advocates well...ummm...You can look it up; it's very bad."

China launching search for domestic potash sources

BEIJING, 8 Oct—China has launched a search for domestic sources of potash to ensure stable supplies of the mineral used in fertilizer, a state news agency said Friday, amid official concern about mining giant BHP's bid to acquire a major Canadian producer.

China is a major potash importer and says a BHP Billiton Ltd. takeover of Canada's Potash Corp could boost prices and hurt Chinese farmers.

A state company reportedly is considering a possible competing bid to BHP's $39 billion offer but Canadian officials are wary of allowing Chinese ownership.

The Ministry of Land and Resources has spent 50 million yuan ($7 million) this year looking for potash in China and plans to spend 100 million yuan annually through 2015, Xinhua said, citing ministry sources.

Wayward baggage handler causes Pa security scare

PHILADELPHIA, 8 Oct—Two US Airways workers loading a Bermuda-bound plane grew suspicious of whether another baggage handler was allowed to be near the jet and confronted him Thursday, leading the man to flee and forcing transportation security officials to remove passengers and rescan all their luggage.

More than 100 passengers and five crew members were taken off USAirways Flight 1070 for more than four hours over the security issue.

The Philadelphia baggage handlers alerted their bosses when they saw a co-worker who was not assigned to be near the plane, FBI spokesman JJ Klaver said. "When they asked him to leave, he drove away from the plane in a baggage loading-vehicle," he said.

By late Thursday, the person had not been identified or located, Klaver said. Officials believe he was authorized to be in that section of the airport, but not at that particular place.

Authorities swept the plane for explosives and found none, Klaver told The Associated Press. The situation did not appear to have any connection to terrorism, he said.

The flight had been scheduled to depart at about 11 am. Passengers were instead removed and the plane was towed away for inspection. The Airbus 319 was surrounded by emergency vehicles with lights flashing, and security dogs moved from bag to bag, checking luggage spread on the ground near the jet. The flight finally left after 4 pm.

Armed men kidnap peacekeeper in Sudan's Darfur

EL FASHER, 8 Oct—Armed men abducted a civilian peacekeeper in the capital of Sudan's North Darfur state Thursday hours after UN Security Council envoys arrived in the city, the mission said.

It was believed to be the first time kidnapers had seized a foreigner in El Fasher, a development certain to dismay aid officials in Darfur who have pulled staff back to the main towns to escape a wave of abductions in remote locations.

"Today in the evening, armed men entered the residence of four civilian staff members in downtown El Fasher. They tied up two of them and made away with the other two in a vehicle. One man escaped and the other is still missing," said Kemal Saiki, spokesman for the joint UN/African Union force UNAMID. Saiki said the missing man was not Sudanese but gave no other personal details. Sudanese security forces sealed off the main exits from the city, seeking the UNAMID vehicle that the kidnapers used to escape, he added.

Ukraine announces grain export restrictions

KIEV, 8 Oct—Ukraine, one of the world's leading grain exporters, on Thursday announced a limit on exports after a severe drought, but confusion remained on the precise volume of restrictions.

Prime Minister Andrei Klyuev was the first to announce through his spokesman that the government would allow the export of two million tonnes of maize (corn), 500,000 tonnes of wheat and 500,000 tonnes of barley.

The measure will "remain in place until the end of the year," Klyuev's spokesman Artem Petrenko said.

But shortly after, Finance Minister Fedir Yaroshenko gave different figures: "500,000 tonnes for wheat and 3.0 million tonnes for maize," he said, Interfax agency reported.

Agriculture Minister Nikolai Prisyazhnyuk later denied altogether that the issue had been settled, saying the cabinet had "decided to continue working on the document" until its "definite" approval on Monday or Wednesday, Interfax reported.

The government is still discussing both the volume of the export caps and their duration, he said.

He added that the export restriction should be three million tonnes for corn, one million tonnes for wheat, and 150,000 tonnes for barley.—Internet

Pfizer says recalled 191,000 Lipitor bottles

NEW YORK, 8 Oct—Pfizer Inc said it recalled 191,000 bottles of its top-selling Lipitor cholesterol fighter following reports of a musty odor coming from some bottles of the medicine made by a third-party supplier.

The world's largest drugmaker said the recall, which took place in mid-August, involved seven lots of 40 milligram Lipitor, as well as three other lots of the medicine supplied to a Canadian generic drugmaker. Five of the seven recalled lots of the branded medicine were in the United States, while two were recalled from Canada, Pfizer said.

The recall was initiated after the company received three reports from consumers complaining about the musty odor, including one so-called adverse event report, Pfizer spokesman Rick Chambers said. The health problem reported by the consumer was found to be not likely to be related to the odor problem, Chambers said.

Even with declining revenue amid generic competition in some countries, such as Canada, Lipitor remains the world's largest-selling prescription medicine with annual sales in excess of $11 billion.

Yemen arrests seven suspects in attack on UK diplomat

SAN'A, 8 Oct—Yemeni authorities announced on Thursday the arrest of seven suspects in the attack on the motorcade of the British embassy's No 2 all from an area in the capital that has become synonymous with militancy.

The neighbourhood of Nuqum in Yemen's capital of San'a not only plays host to the US and British embassies but contains a sprawling slum on the eastern half of the city which security officials say is full of extremists with Al-Qaeda connections. Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula, an offshoot of Osama bin Laden's terror network, was formed more than a year ago when Yemen and Saudi militant groups merged. Al-Qaeda fighters are believed to have built up strongholds in remote parts of the country, allying with powerful tribes that resent the government of President Ali Abdullah Saleh.

They are also believed to have a presence in the capital city itself and several attacks in recent years have cast doubt on the government's ability to protect its own backyard. On Wednesday, militants fired a rocket at an embassy vehicle containing four officials and the deputy chief of mission as it was passing through Nuqum. One staffer and three bystanders were wounded.

Morocco draws on the elements for its green energy project

A Moroccan flag flies next to a wind turbine at a 250-million-euro (300 million US dollar) wind farm, near Tangiers, shortly after its inauguration by Moroccan King Mohammed VI in June 2010.—INTERNET

DHAR SAADANE, 8 Oct—Water, sun and wind: Morocco has launched an ambitious programme to harness the elements to produce “green” electricity to reduce its dependence on energy imports. And eventually it even hopes to export the energy produced.

Lining the hills of Dhar Saadane, 126 windmills overlook the city of Tangiers, in what site manager Loubna Farabi says is the largest windmill park in Africa. King Mohammed VI himself launched the site in June, one of the first steps towards Morocco’s avowed aim of exploiting renewable energy sources. It has a capacity of 140 megawatts (MW).

But to get that green energy requires a lot of money up front, especially when you are dealing with relatively new technology.

What has helped however, is the growing interest along the southern Mediterranean coastline among not just businesses but some European governments.

This has sparked interest in the Mediterranean to develop one of the region’s most abundant resources: the sun.

Pakistan envoy criticises US travel alert

LONDON, 8 Oct—A US travel alert warning Americans travelling in Europe against possible terrorist attacks may have been politically motivated, Pakistan’s top diplomat in Britain told a newspaper Friday.

High commissioner Wajid Shamsul Hasan suggested the decision to issue the alert — which followed reports militants in Pakistan were plotting to target Europe could have been influenced by mid-term polls in the US next month. “I will not deny the fact that there may be internal political dynamics, including the forthcoming mid-term American elections,” Hasan was quoted as saying in Britain’s Guardian Daily.

“If the Americans have definite information about terrorists and Al-Qaeda people, we should be provided [with] that and we could go after them ourselves.”

The US alert on Sunday was followed by warnings from Britain, Japan and Sweden that its citizens may be at risk of terror attacks while travelling in Europe. Hasan further said recent US attacks inside Pakistan had “set the country on fire” and warned that mounting public anger could lead to American personnel in Pakistan being attacked.

“If they [the Americans] kill someone again, they will react,” he was quoted as saying.

“There is a figure that there are 3,000 American personnel in Pakistan. They would be very easy targets.”

Universal Postal Union’s Director General Message on World Post Day 2010

9 October, 2010

A Post that is innovative and relevant

With the surge in new information and communication technologies transforming our world, many are wondering whether Posts really do have a future. My response is a categorical yes.

Post offer a whole host of services—both traditional and new—to meet the communication needs of billions of people and businesses every day. Instead of retreating before these new technologies, which are changing our concept of communication almost every day, Posts are changing too and showing that they can also be innovative.

Some 65% of the world’s national Posts now offer online services, including online bill payments (16%), e-postage services (13%) and delivery of items against e-signatures (10%). Another 12% offer internet shopping (e-commerce), and, a full 40% provide public internet access points. A new top level domain name, post, recently assigned by the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN), in sponsorship with the UPU, will enable the postal sector to establish a solid base in cyberspace for developing secure and trusted e-postal services.

This is a course that needs to be followed. While Posts worldwide continue to process more than 483 billion letters per year, mail volumes continue to decline as a result of electronic substitution and the recent financial crisis (particularly in industrialized countries and depending on the state of the economy).

And although physical mail will not be disappearing overnight any time soon despite this downward trend, Posts are looking to the future by diversifying their products and services. Thanks to e-commerce, parcel volumes are taking off. Posts in many countries are seeing annual growth rates of 20% in parcel volumes due to online sales. Posts are also offering more and more financial services, customized e-services, logistics services, administrative services and many others.

All of these services also create jobs and support local businesses. A study of 5,561 municipalities in Brazil revealed that the opening of a postal bank branch in one of these municipalities over four years directly resulted in a 14% increase in the number of new jobs and a 23% increase in the number of new small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs). More generally, economists agree that postal services help to increase a country’s gross national product by at least 1%.

On this 9 October, World Post Day, let us remember the very relevant and valuable role the Post plays in the day-to-day lives of billions of people and businesses, not only as a means of communication, but also as an essential driver of economic growth.

Most Americans Back Embryonic Stem Cell Research

WASHINGTON, 8 Oct—Americans overwhelmingly support embryonic stem cell research, and that backing stretches across a broad range of demographic groups, including Republicans, Catholics and born-again Christians, according to a new Harris Interactive/HealthDay poll. Almost three-quarters (72 percent) of the adults surveyed believe that scientists should be allowed to use embryonic stem cells left over from in vitro fertilization procedures to search for potential treatments or ways to prevent diseases such as Parkinson's disease, Alzheimer's, diabetes and other conditions. Only 12 percent oppose using stem cells for biomedical research, numbers that mirror those from a similar poll conducted in 2005. "There is now overwhelming public support for using embryonic stem cells in biomedical research," said Humphrey Taylor, chairman of the Harris Poll, a service of Harris Interactive—Internet

Wave of mass robberies terrorizes Rio residents

SAO PAULO, 8 Oct—Dozens of armed drug gang members have been setting up roadblocks and robbing drivers en masse in recent days in the Rio de Janeiro area, prompting the firing of 19 police battalion leaders in the city that will host the 2016 Olympics.

Residents were yanked from their cars in the middle of the streets in about 10 such robberies in the past week, including three since Tuesday. Gunmen made off with vehicles and took some victims hostage as they battled police with weapons and grenades.

No serious injuries have been linked to the robberies so far, although Globo TV's website said Thursday that a 13-year-old boy was killed in the crossfire of a gunbattle during a police operation to recover a stolen vehicle in a shantytown. It was not known if he was killed by police or gang members.

'Disgusting' sculpture stays on show in Milan

MILAN, 8 Oct — Milan city council has extended the display of a controversial new sculpture by Italy's most famous living artist, Maurizio Cattelan. The sculpture — officially titled LOVE but popularly known as The Middle Finger — will now remain in the Piazza d'Affari outside the Milan stock exchange until the end of a retrospective of Cattelan's work in the city on 24 October.

Now admirers of the artist's work are pressing for the piazza to become its permanent home. But opinions are sharply divided. Cattelan's latest creation is a huge hand, beautifully sculpted from Carrara marble — the same material used by Michelangelo and Bernini. But its middle finger is extended skywards in a very un-Renaissance-like gesture of contempt.

HIV infections could hit 3.2m a year by 2031 if funding is not increased

LONDON, 8 Oct — Merely controlling HIV and Aids will cost between $397bn and $733bn over the next 20 years — and unless more money is spent the pandemic will continue to spread, experts warned today. If funding is not increased from 2009, infections could rise from 2.3 million a year to 3.2 million by 2031, claimed a report by the aids2031 financing group, headed by the Results for Development Institute in Washington DC.

In the Lancet medical journal, the group warns it is "increasingly improbable" in tough economic times that donors and governments will find enough money to fund a rapid increase in universal access to prevention and treatment services by 2015. It is estimated that would prevent about 7 million more deaths and 14.2 million infections than if efforts continued on the present scale. —Internet

FBI seizes John Lennon fingerprints before auction

A set of John Lennon's fingerprints being auctioned for at least $100,000 was seized by the Federal Bureau of Investigation on Wednesday 30 years after the singer's death.

The 1976 signed application for Lennon's US citizenship was one of the hallmarks of about 850 celebrity items in an online sale timed around Lennon's 70th birthday on Saturday.

The fingerprint card was being shown to media at a midtown New York store early Wednesday in an auction preview of more than 90 Beatles items when the FBI faxed a subpoena there and took the card.

Hot dog vendor's trailer stolen

Wait staff at an American restaurant prepare a table for the city's first hot dog eating competition in Beijing on 11 July, 2009. A New York state hot dog vendor said his livelihood is in danger after someone stole his hot dog trailer from its usual location.

Fred Martucci, 54, proprietor of Fred's Franks in Orangeburg, said he had been working at his business for 9 hours a day, six days a week for more than a year before the trailer was stolen 30 Sept from the parking lot of Orangeburg General Auto Repairs, The Journal News, White Plains, NY, reported Thursday.

"They took my business. They took my livelihood, my means of supporting my family," he said. "It hit me the other day when I realized that I have no work to go to and no way to make money."

Detective Sgt George Garrecht of the Orangetown police said surveillance footage depicts three men cutting locks and stealing the trailer, but rain at the time of the incident makes obtaining detailed descriptions of the suspects difficult.

Liverpool buyers have winning legacy with Red Sox

BOSTON, 8 Oct — To paraphrase Liverpoolian legend John Lennon, all the Boston Red Sox owners are saying to sceptical Liverpool FC fans is give them a chance. A deal by New England Sports

Ventures to purchase debt-saddled Liverpool for 477 million dollars was not made lightly by 61-year-old hedge-fund billionaire John Henry and partner Tom Werner, a television producer.

“Our objective is to stabilize the club and ultimately return Liverpool FC to its rightful place in English and European football, successfully competing for and winning trophies,” they said in a statement. Liverpool supporters can be forgiven for worries about trading one set of American owners, Tom Hicks and George Gillett, for another, especially with fan protests against the Glazers, the wealthy US family that own Manchester United.— Internet

Brazil cruise to victory over Iran

ABU DHABI, 8 Oct — A much changed Brazil from the one that disappointed at the World Cup finals eased to a 3-0 victory over Iran in an international friendly here on Thursday. Goals by Daniel Alves, Alexandre Pato and Nilmar were enough to see the Brazilians to an easy win on what was their second appearance in the United Arab Emirates - they walloped the UAE 8-0 in 2005.

Brazil — now under the management of Mano Menezes after Dunga was sacked following their exit in the World Cup quarter-finals to the Netherlands - opened the scoring in the 14th minute through a terrific freekick by Alves. Despite being cheered on by the 20,000 strong crowd the Iranians couldn't deliver much of a threat but the Brazilians also could not add to their tally during the first period.— Internet

Construction of Ayeyawady Bridge (Sinkhan) swinging into action

Article: Reporter Tun Zaw (Sangyoung); Photos: Reporter Myint Aung (Ahlon)

Ayeyawady Bridge (Sinkhan) in Kachin State under construction.

Myitkyina's hazy morning can make anyone feel content. The bus I boarded left Myitkyina Bus Terminal for Bhamo at 8 am.

It was 2.30 pm when I stepped off the bus in Bhamo. So I managed to stay for a night in Bhamo as it is too late to proceed.

Early in the morning on the following day, I took a hovercraft ride to visit the construction site of Ayeyawady Bridge (Sinkhan).

The construction site with mountain ranges surrounded and with clouds cast over could be seen from the distance.

The construction of the Ayeyawady Bridge (Sinkhan) was implemented in Sinkhan village in Bhamo of Bhamo District in Kachin State as a special project by the guidance of the Head of State.
