Strong sense of nationalistic spirit

The Union of Myanmar is, indeed, a land of natural beauty with high mountain ranges, large plains, temperate climate patterns, fertile soil, large area of waters, and long rivers. In addition, it is rich in natural resources in abundance. In each of the parts of the Union, people of various national races have lived in harmony since time immemorial. After waging three aggressive wars, the colonialists annexed Myanmar, a prosperous country, thereby making all national races feel deeply heartbreaking. In colonial days, the people, whenever they were called, had to answer Phayar to colonialists. As for national people, that was a bitter pill to swallow. Inspired by anti-colonialist sentiment and anti-Fascist sentiment, national races came to revolt against the invaders with strong sense of nationalistic spirit. In the end, the alien intruders had to withdraw from Myanmar.

Thriving summer paddy with water of Yaybok Dam

These days, it is not strange to see thriving paddy fields in summer. Among them, views in Taputo, Thanban and Htilon villages in Hlaingbwe Township, Kayin State, is unique. The reason is that these villages had no water for growing summer paddy in the past. But now the villages can grow summer paddy with the supply of water from Yaybok dam.

I saw growing of summer paddy along the road to Yaybok dam. So, I stopped for a break in Thanban village. "Thanks to the dam, the region where no crops were grown would now put summer paddy as well as other crops on irrigated fields as multiple-cropping pattern," said the farmers.

Bees can follow sun on cloudy days

BRISBANE, 2 Feb—Bees can navigate using the sun even on cloudy days using clues from polarized light to determine the hidden sun's position, Australian researchers say.

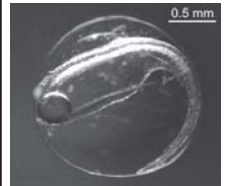

Mandyam Srinivasan of the University of Queensland in Brisbane, Australia, says that because sunlight passing through the atmosphere is polarized in a pattern that reveals the location of the sun, it has long been suspected bees use special photoreceptors in their eyes to navigate on cloudy days, News Scientist.com reported Tuesday.

Now, Srinivasan says, he has "the ultimate proof" that theory is correct. He and his team created a simple "maze" of four tunnels and flooded two of the corridors with light polarized parallel to the length of the corridor, the other two with light polarized perpendicularly to the corridor.

They then trained about 40 bees to enter the maze through one corridor and exit via a second that had a sugar reward at its end.

When the sugar was removed, the bees continued to use the same exit. But when the polarized light patterns were switched, the bees began using a different exit — one that now was indicated by the polarized light pattern than had previously led to the sugar.—Internet

Spacecraft finds new comets, asteroids

PASADENA, 2 Feb—A NASA spacecraft surveying our solar system has discovered previously unknown objects, including 20 new comets and more than 33,000 asteroids, scientists say.

The main mission of the NEOWISE programme was to hunt for more asteroids and

The mission also identified 134 near-Earth objects, or NEOs, asteroids and comets whose orbits bring them within 28 million miles of Earth's path around the sun, researchers said.

"Even just one year of observations from the NEOWISE project has significantly increased our catalog of data on NEOs and the other small bodies of the solar systems," Lindley Johnson, NASA programme executive for the NEO Observation Programme, said.

Google touts "game changer" in online art viewing

LONDON, 2 Feb—Google aims to bring the world's great art galleries into the home with a new website that offers virtual tours using Street View technology, the ability to build private collections and ultra-high resolution images.

While most big galleries have been busy making their works accessible online for years, experts told a launch at London's Tate Britain gallery on Tuesday that Google's site was looking to take the online art experience to a new level.

"It could be the game changer," said Julian Raby of the Freer Gallery of Art, part of the Smithsonian in Washington DC, which is one of 17 galleries taking part in the project.

Nelson Mattos, VP Engineering at Google, said the Art Project site (www.googleartproject.com) would allow children from Latin America, India and Africa, who were unlikely to see the originals, to come close to the experience on the internet.

"This really represents a major step forward in the way people are going to interact with these beautiful treasures of art around the world," he said, adding that Google planned to expand the site over the coming years.

Mattos and art curators at the launch said they were confident that no matter how advanced the technology, the new site would never replace visiting the museums.

"We obviously don't believe this technology is going to prevent people from coming to the museums," he added. "We hope that the opposite will happen."—Reuters

A bruise creates a darkened area of skin, when an injury causes small blood vessels to leak below the skin's surface.

The ADAM Encyclopedia suggests how to help prevent bruises:

- * Reduce your risk of falling at home by taking precautions including practicing ladder safety and being sure not to kneel stand on high surfaces, such as a countertop.
- * Always use a safety belt while you're in a vehicle.
- * When playing sports, wear appropriate protective gear, such as a helmet, shoulder pads, elbow pads, shin guards, knee and thigh pads.

Infectious disease experts call for more focus on hepatitis C

NEW YORK, 2 Feb—Among injection drug users, new cases of HIV infection have declined dramatically in the past two decades, but the number of new infections from the hepatitis C virus have dropped only a small amount, a new study reports.

The findings suggest that efforts — such as needle exchange programmes and substance abuse treatment — to prevent bloodborne transmission of infectious diseases have been successful against HIV but more needs to be done to reduce the transmission of hepatitis C virus (HCV), according to the study's leader, Shruti H Mehta of the Johns Hopkins School of Public Health.

The researchers noted that HCV is nearly 10 times more transmissible by sharing needles than HIV.

Sharing a needle just once can be enough to transmit HCV.

The study, which looked at infection rates among injection drug users in Baltimore over a 20-year span, found dramatic decreases in new HIV infections: from 5.5 cases per 100 person years in 1988-1989 to two per 100 in 1994-1995, and to zero cases in 1998 and 2005-2008.—Internet

If mom smokes, daughter more likely to SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELA, 2 Feb—Mothers transmit their smoking habits to their daughters and fathers transmit their smoking habits to their sons, a researcher in Spain says.

"Fathers transmit their smoking habits to a statistically significant level to their sons, and the same is true of mothers and daughters," study co-author Maria Loureiro of the Universidade de Santiago de Compostela in Spain says in a statement.

"However, if a mother smokes it does not seem to impact on the probability of her son smoking, and similarly a father that smokes does not affect his daughter."

The study, published in the journal Oxford Bulletin of Economics and Statistics, also finds estimated probabilities of a son or a daughter smoking if both parents smoke is about 24 percent but falls to almost 12 percent if neither parent smokes.

"Anti-smoking policies for young people need to be put in place that will also include the family and social context in which they live," Loureiro says.—Internet

China's manufacturing sector PMI drops to 5-month low of 52.9% in January

BEIJING, 2 Feb—China's manufacturing sector purchasing managers index (PMI) fell to a five-month low of 52.9 percent in January, compared with 53.9 percent in December, the China Federation of Logistics and Purchasing (CFLP) said Tuesday.

The January figure means the benchmark index for economic expansion has kept above the boom-and-bust line of 50 percent for 23 consecutive months.

Analysts said authorities' moves to cool prices prompted the decline.

Haitong Securities analyst Liu Tiejun attributed the decline to the government's tightening measures and the seasonal effect of the Spring Festival, or the Chinese Lunar New Year, which falls on Thursday.

The PMI is a package of indexes that measure the performance of the country's manufacturing sector.

A reading above 50 percent indicates economic expansion. One below 50 percent indicates contraction.

Economists expect Australia's central bank to lift rates later in 2011

SYDNEY, 2 Feb—Australia's low inflation and flooding in Queensland have spared borrowers a February interest rate rise, but there could be more hikes later in 2011, said economists on Tuesday.

The Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) on Tuesday cited low inflation and the "temporary adverse effect" of the Queensland floods on the nation's economy as reasons for

Japan volcano erupts again for 6th time in southwest region

The local branch of the Japan Meteorological Agency has as yet not reported any avalanches as result of the blast, nor can confirm if volcanic debris and noxious gases were spewed from the crater, although they did say debris could fall on areas within 4 kilometres of the crater.

However, the agency did confirm that no significant damage has been reported following the 1,421-metre-high volcano erupting.

With the water storage area of about 36,000 acres feet, the dam measuring 17,720 feet in length and 46 feet in height lies on Yaybok Creek and Kasai Creek. Construction of the dam's embankment has been completed and canal works are being carried out. During this rainy season, the dam received more rain water than its brim mark. So, water has been supplied to the surrounding villages through tributary canal and direct canals since December so as to grow summer paddy. Now plans are under way to put 1000 acres of land under summer paddy. The dam is due to be completed. In the near future, the region would see thriving summer paddy. And the socio-economic status of the local farmers will be more improved.

A total of 23095 acres of summer paddy was grown in Hlaingbwe Township last year. Growing 1,000 acres of summer paddy is set this year and 3,000 acres in the coming years.

Thanlwin River. Being grown on alluvial soils, the Shwegun groundnut has a good harvest. Regarding the education, Shwegun Basic Education High School has a high pass rate of matriculation exam.

In the time of the SPDC, emphasis is constantly placed on the development of agricultural

Don't trivialize the national cause

National brethren United we stand

Talking about Myanmar's political affairs, national consolidation cannot be left behind. Reviewing Myanmar's political landscape, struggles for building national consolidation, incitements to disintegration of national consolidation, conflicts caused by the breakup of national unity, and instability and delay of progress caused by the conflicts have taken a lot of pages in history.

Since the time of independence struggles, the patriotic leaders had understood the importance of national unity. The moment Myanmar came under servitude, national leaders of various national races such as Bamar, Shan, Kayin, Chin and Kayah launched anti-colonialist movements in order to drive the British colonialists out of the country. Yet, with the lack of good leadership, those anti-colonialist forces were easily defeated by the British imperialists. Then, the British adopted their administrative machinery systematically in Myanmar so that a major armed resistance could not emerge.

When the Upper Myanmar was put under the British rule in the aftermath of the third Anglo-Myanmar war, the British administrative system in the Lower Myanmar was in place already. Therefore, it was only needed to spread the administrative system of the Lower Myanmar to the Upper Myanmar. However, the colonialists, who had decided to stop the emergence of more resistance forces, designated the regions of Upper Myanmar, excluding Shan State, as scheduled districts on 4 May 1886. Later on, they ruled the Kachin people and the Chin people separately by promulgating the hilly Kachin nationality law in 1895 and the hilly Chin nationality law in 1896. As the divided rule had reigned up to the time of WWII, the regions of Shan, Kachin, and Chin were separated from the Myanmar administrative area, designated as Region-1 and Region-2 and directly ruled by the governor when the diarchy was adopted in 1923 and the 91-department administrative rule in 1935. The administrative systems among the national races were different from each other. And even the hilly regions had different administrative systems.

With the hilly regions dividedly ruled in terms of race and politics, they gained no access to political developments and independence struggles of the mainland Myanmar. What's more, the British colonialists gave their follower rich men power to take charge of administrative and political affairs in the mainland. In the hilly regions, the colonialists entrusted Sawbwas, Sawphyas and Duwas with the arbitrary powers to rule on their behalf. Their aim was to provoke class differences among the national races and to prevent the possible emergence of united political forces.

The British colonialists adopted the following divide-and-rule policy in three categories in order to break up the national unity in Myanmar.

- The divided rule of the regions of national races can cause geographical-divide.
- Adoption of different administrative systems among the national races and giving of different rights can lead to racial discord.
- Use of lackeys for ensuring smooth administrative machinery can lead to different classes.

In consequence, the hilly regions did not participate in political movements of the mainland until before 1945. In addition, politicians from the mainland were not allowed to go to the hilly regions. At the same time, political organizations operated for own rule and independence such as GCSA and Doh Bamar Asiayon were split into two and four groups because of the colonialists' instigation and incentives. When independence struggles surfaced after the Second World War, patriotic politicians led by Bogyoke Aung San and military leaders formed AFPFL in order that political forces in Myanmar became politically united.

However, when Bogyoke Aung San-led AFPFL demanded Myanmar's independence from the British, the issue of the hilly regions came to a head. When the Myanmar delegation led by Bogyoke Aung San went to Britain in February 1947 for independence, the British claimed that the Myanmar side should first enquire whether the hilly regions wanted to cooperate with the mainland in achieving independence as they had received a telegraph sent by Shan Sawbwas saying the delegation did not represent them. In signing Aung San-Atlee Agreement, the Myanmar side had to agree to the point that Myanmar was to enquire about the stance of the hilly regions in the effort for achieving independence by forming an inquiry commission.

That was why Bogyoke Aung San met with the national leaders from the hilly regions, built national consolidation and held Panglong Conference in February 1947 in order to regain independence. But, only the Kachin, Chin and Shan representatives from the hilly regions took part in the conference, and Kayin representatives from Thanlwin District, another hilly region attended the conference only as observers. It was found that Rakhine, Mon and Kayah nationals living outside the hilly regions and the remaining nationalities such as Pa-O, Palaung, Danu, Wa, Kokant and Lahu whose regions were ruled by feudalist Shan chieftains did not attend the conference. Anyhow, the Panglong Conference was able to forge national unity so that the whole country, including the hilly regions, could achieve independence. It, therefore, can be said that Myanmar was able to build national consolidation to a certain extent during the period of independence struggles.

Again in the post-independence period, national consolidation was disintegrated quickly due to different ideologies, ism and racism. The ruling AFPFL government at that time tried to rebuild national consolidation, but in vain as there were personal conflicts among the party. U Nu's Pa-Hta-Sa government that won the 1960 elections held a national convention on 24 February 1962 so as to discuss the establishment of Rakhine, Mon and Chin States and the problems of rights of Shan State. The convention was attended by political leaders and national race representatives. Since the Shan chieftains threatened to secede from the Union of Myanmar if their demands were not met at the convention, the Revolutionary Council had to take over State duties on 2 March 1962.

The Revolutionary Council continued to try to build national consolidation. Issuing the stances of the Revolutionary Council and holding internal peace talks to solve the problem of internal insurgencies were the measures the Revolutionary Council had taken for ensuring national reconsolidation. Besides, the goal of socialism aspired in the period of independence struggles was a long way away in the parliamentary democracy age due to the different political parties with different ideologies. So, the nation decided to adopt a single party system in order for political parties and national people to work together under the leadership of a single party. Yet, national consolidation could not be achieved as Pa-Hta-Sa and AFPFL leaders that favoured the parliamentary democracy system, leftist communists and racial extremists were in constant opposition to the State.

In the 1988 unrest, the situation of national unity in Myanmar was the worst. The Tatmadaw government that had to take over State responsibilities in such a dire situation tried its best to achieve national consolidation. It can be found that the Tatmadaw government used different approaches as it had found out why the previous governments failed to forge national unity.

The Tatmadaw

government held a national convention with the participation of eight delegate groups namely delegates of political parties, delegates of representatives-elect of 1990 election, delegates of national races, delegates of peasants, delegates of workers, delegates of intellectuals and intelligentsia, delegates of State service personnel and delegates of national race armed groups who exchanged arms for peace and other invited persons. Basic principles and detailed basic principles were laid down for writing a constitution. Among more than 1000 delegates to the convention were over 600 delegates of national races. So, it can be said at least one national race delegate from one township out of 325 in Myanmar could participate in the convention. Thanks to the discussions those delegates made about shaping the future nation with a view to seeking the national interest without sectarianism and ism, national reconsolidation could be built among the Myanmar political forces at the national convention.

In order to thwart the hardships and difficulties of the people living in border areas which lacked stability and the rule of law due to armed clashes, the government took measures to reach ceasefire agreement with national race armed groups. As a result, many of those armed groups who returned to the legal fold and are working side by side with the government for regional development. Even some of them competed in the 2010 elections after they had given up the armed struggle line and made eternal peace with the State. The national consolidation that broke up due to armed clashes could be rebuilt through peace negotiations.

In order to repair the damage to national unity caused by inequitable infrastructural development in the country, the Tatmadaw government formed the Central Committee for Progress of Border Areas and National Races under the leadership of Head of State Senior General Than Shwe and started implementing development tasks in 21 border regions. Likewise, the project of 24 development regions was launched to ensure balanced development of all parts of the nation. To ward off the geographical barrier to the regions of the Union, networks of roads, bridges and railroads have been and are being built as national level projects. This means national reconsolidation was built by carrying out national development tasks.

While building infrastructures that can facilitate national reconsolidation and national unity, the government had to prevent the destructive acts of internal and external elements who attempted to harm the national unity. Measures had to be taken to be able to activate the State administrative machinery and form a strong government.

The government's work programmes for national reconsolidation and national unity were not carried out only with political and military outlooks. They were a strategic plan carried out in consideration of all sectors such as politics, economy, military, social affairs, development and administration. As a result, many parts of the nation have achieved greater peace and stability, rule of law and progress ever than before.

However, it cannot be said that the endeavours for national reconsolidation have met with complete success. There are many tasks ahead for the State structure. The relations between the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw and State/Region Hluttaws and the relations between the Pyidaungsu government and State/Region govern -ments will be totally different from the State structure of the past. In addition, there will be separate executive, legislative and judicial sectors, and the executive structure with check and balance will be formed for the first time. So, there will be many challenges to be addressed in the future. Again, there are still tasks to build eternal peace in the areas of some national races where peace was made temporarily and to prevent the danger of internal and external elements who are still attempting to disrupt the seven-step Road Map of the State. Only if those challenges are addressed successfully, can it be said that national reconsolidation has been built.

Union Spirit

Ignoring the achievements in national reconsolidation to this date, there are calls for holding a conference like the one organized in Panglong in 1947 to build national unity. Some are even giving suggestions to convene it online.

Seemingly, those people think that the process of national reconsolidation can be materialized through a meeting between four or five groups under the leadership of a certain person. Just try to reach an agreement to select representative for each of the ethnic race groups and the political forces let alone trying to convene the conference. That's my advice for those people.

Today is not the time to hold a conference like the Panglong conference in which AFPFL and leaders of Shan, Kachin and Chin met. They should understand this. National race groups who did not get the opportunity to participate in Panglong conference are seeing greater political and economic development at present. Some of the national races groups now have armed troops existing under a provisional peace agreement. Armed members of some have transformed themselves into border guard forces. In addition, they have officially set up political parties. On the other hand there are armed insurgent groups and exile groups claiming themselves as representatives of certain ethnic races. There are also party representatives and independent representatives elected in the 2010 elections for the respective legislative Hluttaws.

In 1947, the nation had to face only the British who colonized her. British agents had created a lot of difficulties before and during the Panglong conference. Even Bogyoke Aung San was so disappointed that he had to arrange a flight back home to Yangon. These facts can be found in the books compiled by the persons who took part in the conference.

Geopolitics has changed a lot during the past over 60 years. There are new powerful players taking the place of the British in Asia. Apart from those powers, many neighbouring countries and regional countries are getting involved in or are trying to get involved in Myanmar affairs for their own interest. Some with good intention and some with bad motives.

A conference held under different voices and views and which is open to every individual or organization assuming himself or itself as the representative of his or its own ethnic race will bring no results.

Conceiving an idea to convene a conference based on hero-worshipping without having any firm and strong background organization and precise representative selection system will be just a fantasy extremely opposed to reality. Or maybe it is an arrogant act. One important thing to note is that Bogyoke Aung San and AFPFL were included in the cabinet of the British governor when they held the Panglong conference; that they were entrusted with the power to run the administration affairs except from defence matters and foreign affairs; that the British government had accepted AFPFL as the only organization to deal with matters concerning Myanmar's independence. So, AFPFL was able to sponsor the conference successfully.

Understandably, the idea to hold a Panglongconference-like meeting without giving any role to the Tatmadaw that is leading the national transition process and the parties that won seats in the 2010 elections will not be better than a cheap political stunt. The Tatmadaw has already achieved success to a certain extent in restoring national reconsolidation in all aspects to ensure a peaceful transition process.

Even if they hold this kind of conference without Tatmadaw's participation with goodwill, the conference will surely become a tool for the organizations opposing the government or trying to harm the seven-step Road Map. So, the scheme is not a remedy for any problem but a poison for the national reconsolidation process.

But I do not mean that nothing should be done for the national reconsolidation process. There are ways. The constitutional Hluttaws at all levels are the venues to strengthen the established national consolidation. Public elected representatives are the members of the hluttaws. People of the respective constituencies have already chosen the persons regardless of their political base to serve their interest. National races and specifically elected national races are included in those representative-elect. Moreover, there are also Tatmadaw representatives. Hluttaws at all levels are the venues where dialogues among the political parties, national races representatives and the Tatmadaw, a current popular issue, can be held practically. They will be able to build mutual trust and understanding while carrying out legislative affairs hand in hand. The rights of the national races, the Hluttaws, the local governments and the legislative power to preserve and promote their languages and cultures, are already enshrined in the Constitution. Basically, they will have to make effective use of the advantages and amend the faults in cooperation at the Hluttaws.

What about the unelected persons and organizations? They will have the right to discuss and present their views externally in accord with the rights of citizens stipulated in the Constitution, and to give suggestions to the representative-elect of their constituency concerned. And if they believe that their opinions and views win public support, they can take part in the next elections to do politics in the Hluttaws.

What I have presented in this article will be the best means for political forces to strengthen national reconsolidation within and outside Hluttaws and the best opportunities for all-inclusiveness in the national reconsolidation process. All should be aware of the fact that there will be more harm than benefits, if those people try to realize their fantasies instead of applying the best means of the time.

Pakistan rejects "New York Times" nuclear arms report

ISLAMABAD, 2 Feb—Pakistan Tuesday dismissed a New York Times report that Pakistan has steadily "expanded its nuclear arsenal" since President Obama came to office.

The report said that it is building the capability to surge ahead in the production of nuclear-weapons material, putting it on a path to overtake Britain as the world's fifth largest nuclear weapons power.

The NYT reported that Pakistan's determination to add considerably to its arsenal — mostly to deter India — has also become yet another irritant in its often testy relationship with Washington, particularly as Pakistan seeks to block Obama's renewed efforts to negotiate a global treaty that would ban the production of new nuclear material.

Commenting on the report titled "Pakistani Nuclear Arms Pose Challenge to US Policy" published by New York Times on 31 January 2011, the Foreign Office Spokesman said that unnecessary alarmist reporting about Pakistan's nuclear programme continues to surface occasionally. "In the nuclearized environment of South Asia, Pakistan continues to follow a responsible policy of maintaining credible minimum deterrence. Pakistan is mindful of the need to avoid arms race with India but would never compromise on its national security," the Pakistani spokesman said.—MNA/Xinhua

The abuse took place in nine different institutions where the unidentified man had worked as a therapist since 1982, police in the canton (state) of Bern said.

Authorities have identified 122 of the victims, with the youngest being 1 year old at the time of the crime. Forty-two of the victims were over 18.

"It's possible that in the course of the investigation more victims will come to light," the head of Bern police's special investigations unit, Gabriele Berger, told a news conference in Bern. Some 100 investigators have been assigned to the case.

Five killed in latest Colombia mine explosion

BOGOTA, 2 Feb — A gas explosion ripped through a mine in Colombia on Tuesday, killing five workers and injuring a sixth, days after the government promised a safety overhaul following a string of similar tragedies.

The methane blast occurred at around 1245

GMT at La Escondida coal mine in the central province of Cundinamarca, a spokesman from the state Institute of Geology and Mining said.

The sixth miner was being treated in hospital, the spokesman said, but the extent of his injuries was not immediately known. No other workers were in the mine at the time of the blast, the official added.

President Juan Manuel Santos cut short a trip to Europe last week to be at the side of the victims of an earlier blast last Wednesday that left 21 workers dead at a coal mine in the northeast of the country.

Santos, before returning from the summit in Switzerland, described the accident as a tragedy that should never have happened. "We must massively reinforce mine safety measures," he told reporters. "For that reason, when I return, I am going to give instructions for a detailed review of all the regulations and their enforcement."—Internet

T-Mobile to sell tablet with 3-D cameras, glasses

NEW YORK, 2 Feb—Aiming to ride two crazes at once, T-Mobile USA will sell a tablet computer that can shoot 3-D videos.

The cell phone company said Wednesday that the "G-Slate" tablet from LG Electronics Inc will be out this spring, but it didn't say exactly when, or how much it would cost.

The tablet will have an 8.9-inch screen and two cameras on the back, which together can capture 3-D, high-definition video. The tablet will come with red-blue 3-D glasses for 3-D viewing while shooting.

The G-Slate will be one of the first tablets with Honeycomb software, a version of Google Inc's Android operating system specifically designed for tablet computers. The G-Slate will have a third camera on the front, for video-conferencing over T-Mobile's wireless broadband network.

The 3-D tablet comes as gadget makers and phone companies are trying to ride the coattails of Apple Inc's hit iPad tablet computer. Meanwhile, Hollywood studios and TV makers are pushing 3-D movies and TV sets, but 3-D TV sales have so far been disappointing.—Internet

California mayor wants to broadcast bird songs

It may sound like a bird-brained idea, but the mayor of a Mojave Desert City wants to brighten the streets by broadcasting recorded bird songs.

Lancaster Mayor R Rex Parris proposed the idea during his State of the City talk on Monday.

The Antelope Valley Press says Parris wants to play the bird chatter from loudspeakers on Lancaster Boulevard. The mayor says there's science to show that listening to birdsong makes people happier.

Parris is known for his flamboyant ideas. He got a law passed giving the Southern California City the right to castrate pit bulls, ordered City officials to learn the Mandarin language in a bid to woo Chinese business, and riled some people by saying he was growing Lancaster into a Christian community.

US couple get married in middle of marathon

A couple in the US, who started the Chevron Houston Marathon as two single people, is said to have crossed the finish line as newlyweds after exchanging vows halfway through the run.

David and Molly took part in the marathon, and then after running 16 miles they stopped at the Williams Tower water wall for their wedding ceremony.

"She was getting a little tired back there and I thought she was going to dump me," MyFoxHouston quoted David, the groom, as saying.

Molly's sister Rachel had come up with the idea, because the couple was always running so much.

'Rent-a-girlfriend' hoax causes stir in France

A hoax website in France has revealed something poignant in modern society by offering to rent men a girlfriend who can stun relatives, friends or business partners with their charm and beauty.

"Have you had enough of being alone? Had enough of your wife?" loueunepetiteamie.com (translatable as rentagirlfriend.com) asked last month, stressing that the "rental services" it offered were strictly non-sexual.

After creating an Internet buzz where chat rooms fought over the morality and legality of renting out fake girlfriends, all was confirmed on Tuesday to be a marketing ploy for a site selling classified ads.

In just one month, it said, the bogus site had 180,000 hits, 550 women offered their services as rental girlfriends and 5,000 men wanted to hire one out.

Alexandre Woog said the media sting had cost his organisation a grand total of 15 euros (20.5 dollars), to buy the domain name and graphic design.

WASHINGTON, 2 Feb — DC United has agreed to take Charlie Davies on loan from France's Sochaux but wants to evaluate how far the American forward has progressed in his comeback from a near-fatal car crash before deciding whether to finalize the deal.

The Major League Soccer team said the 24-year-old is expected to report to the team on Wednesday in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., where it is practicing ahead of the start of the MLS season in March. Davies will train with DC United and be evaluated by team doctors.

DC United said Tuesday that a weeklong evaluation period "will include training and game time with the first team and a full medical evaluation by team doctors in DC." "Details of a 12-month loan have already been negotiated," the team said, "but nothing will be official until DC United is satisfied he is physically capable of playing at the level required to be successful in MLS."—Internet

Man United's Rooney leads goal-spree against Villa

MANCHESTER, 2 Feb — Sir Alex Ferguson believes Wayne Rooney has finally rediscovered his scoring touch after the England striker netted twice in Manchester United's 3-1 win over Aston Villa here on Tuesday.

Rooney had not scored from open play at Old Trafford since the 2-1 victory over Liverpool in March last year, the game before he suffered an ankle injury at Bayern Munich.

The forward has only scored five goals so far this season yet United are still five points clear at the top of the Premier League table and this latest victory equalled their club record of 29 league games unbeaten, set in the 'treble' winning season of 1998/99.

Ferguson insisted he never doubted Rooney would get back on the goal trail, saying: "Goals always help strikers still had the appetite to play and that's the important factor in it all, that he never stops trying the lad. "It's an in-bred thing in the lad.

"He can't be criticised when he gives that effort. He gets his rewards eventually," the veteran United manager added.—Internet

Lazio hold Milan to goalless draw in Italian league

ROME, 2 Feb — Lazio produced a spirited rearguard action to hold Serie A leaders AC Milan to a 0-0 draw at the San Siro on Tuesday.

Lazio came into the match in third place in the league and knowing that a defeat would almost certainly rule them out of the title running.

And although the hosts dominated throughout, with Zlatan Ibrahimovic hitting both posts with a single shot, they could not find a way through the Romans' stubborn resistance.

Torres creates striking problem for Chelsea

Chelsea's English midfielder Frank Lampard (L) celebrates with Ivorian striker Salomon Kalou. INTERNET

SUNDERLAND, 2 Feb — Fernando Torres is set to make his debut for Chelsea against Liverpool — the club who sold him for a British transfer record 50 million pounds — on Sunday despite the English champions winning 4-2 against Sunderland without him.

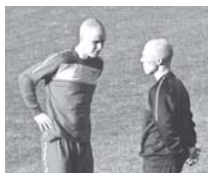

Spain striker Torres's exit from Anfield was the standout deal of Monday's transfer window deadline day. It was also a clear sign billionaire Chelsea owner Roman Abramovich, whose side are still 10 points behind Premier League leaders Manchester United despite an impressive away win against Sunderland, means business.

Based on Chelsea's performance at the Stadium of Light, Carlo Ancelotti could afford to ease Torres into the team off the bench whilst retaining strike duo Didier Drogba and Nicolas Anelka up front for the time being.

Flu typically spreads boy to boy, girl to girl

BEIJING, 2 Feb—A new study in UK shows that flu in kids predominantly spreads from boys to other boys and from girls to other girls, according to media reports Tuesday.

The study, aiming to look at how social networks control flu spread, found that children are about three times more likely to transmit flu to children of the same gender than to children of the opposite gender. It also found that flu transmission is more intensive within students sitting in the same class. But sitting next to someone with the flu doesn't, in itself, increase one's risk.

The data "could help us better understand whether and when it would be appropriate to close a school, or whether it might be better to close individual classes or grades," Dr Simon Cauchemez, the lead author of the study and a researcher at Imperial College London, said in a news release.—Xinhua
