Sinkhan-Katha Road of Katha-Bhamo Road Project to link Sagaing Region and Kachin State

By Kayan Soe Myint

Public Works under the Ministry of Construction in cooperation with 13 companies is building Katha-Bhamo Road, which is 65 miles long from Katha to Sinkhan, dividing it into two sections: the 25 miles and six furlongs long section from Katha to Chaungwa, and the 39 miles and two furlongs long section from Chaungwa and Sinkhan.

We happened to visit Ayeyawady Bridge (Sinkhan) on 5 April. Initially, Katha-Bhamo Project was to build a railroad. Due to the emergence of Ayeyawady Bridge (Sinkhan), the government also built a road apart from the railroad for the convenience of residents. The 25 miles and six furlongs long section from Katha to Chaungwa goes through Pawmmyaing, Mehin, Naru, Khatetchaung, Minle, Hena, Wetsauk, Moetahgyi, Suubokgone, Namhsan and Thamandaik, and the 39 miles and two furlongs long section from Chaungwa and Sinkhan, through Kyaukkyi, Kyauktalone, Teinsun, Si-thaw, Si-ngan, Nankhok, Moesitchaung, Int-oun, Myogon, Naungpin and Sitkaing.

PERSPECTIVES

Improve domestic aviation services

Diplomatic and economic relations between Myanmar and the international community are improving, as testified by the nation's reforms in various sectors. The international airlines that use the Myanmar's airspace and local and international airlines that deal with local airports play an important role in the process.

Myanmar joined the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) on 7 August 1948. It respects the provisions and appendixes of the convention.

Yangon International Airport deals with 2.7 million passengers a year. It will be upgraded to an international standard one that can handle 3.8 million passengers a year, and so will local civil aviation services.

In the process, it is needed to take all necessary measures systematically for advancement in services, airport buildings, management, security and relations with passengers.

Services are to be carried out in line with the rules and regulations to avert unnecessary delays to win greater customer satisfaction. With better services, local airports will cope with a growing number of passengers and they are hopeful of contributing towards the nation's economic growth.

For Afghan civilians, May was grim milestone

KABUL, 12 June—May was the deadliest month for Afghan civilians since the United Nations started tracking deaths in 2007, according to a report released Saturday. The carnage continued, with bombs killing 21 people nationwide — including a family on a religious pilgrimage and a child lured by a suicide attacker pushing an ice cream cart. Violence has been on the rise as the Taliban and other militants try to regain territory lost in the fall and winter to the US-led coalition in southern Afghanistan. The militants have stepped up suicide attacks and bombings that are more likely to affect civilians. Fighting always picks up in the spring after the opium poppy crop is harvested in the south and the snow melts elsewhere in the mountainous country, allowing militants to move more freely. But attacks have intensified as militants try to undermine confidence in the Afghan government, which wants to show it is ready to take over security as the US begins to withdraw some forces.

Pakistan's Taliban deny twin blasts that killed 39

PESHAWAR, 12 June—Pakistan's Taliban on Sunday denied responsibility for twin bomb blasts that ripped through a crowded market in the northwestern city of Peshawar, killing 39 people and injuring dozens.

The attack, one of the deadliest in a series to hit Pakistan since US Navy SEALs killed Osama bin Laden in May, devastated the Khyber Super Market district which includes a hotel, shops and student accommodation.

A small initial blast at around 11:30 pm local time Saturday drew onlookers and emergency services before a second more powerful blast, believed to be from a suicide strike, detonated and was heard for miles around.

"Death toll has risen to 39 in the blasts as four wounded people died in hospital," senior local police official Ijaz Khan told AFP. He said the explosions were just four minutes apart.—Internet

BAGHDAD, 12 June—Twin car bombings in the northern Iraq, and separate attacks on the homes of a schoolteacher and a left at least 11 people dead on Saturday, government officials said.

Violence is raking Iraq as the Shiite-led government and other political factions are debating a request for some American forces to remain in the country beyond the 31 Dec deadline for all US troops to withdraw after more than eight years.

While violence is well below what it had been during intense Shiite-Sunni sectarian fighting in 2006 and 2007, militants are again stepping up deadly attacks. That has led to concerns about what happens when the 47,000 remaining US troops are withdrawn.

Police and hospital officials in the northern city of Mosul said two car bombs exploded in quick succession, killing six people. At least one of the bombs seemed aimed at a police patrol. Mosul is Iraq's third largest city, 225 miles (360 kilometres) northwest of Baghdad. It has been one of the most stubborn militant strongholds.

Warnings of "perfect storm" as fire nears New Mexico

RESERVE, (New Mexico), 12 June— More than 1,000 firefighters converged on this village in the Gila National Forest on Saturday as a massive wildfire that scorched eastern Arizona moved to a quarter mile from the New Mexico border.

With the winds picking up, temperatures rising and humidity low, the National Weather Service issued a Red Flag Warning for this sparsely populated corner of the state, indicating grave fire danger.

"Everything is ripe for a perfect storm," Fire Information Officer Sean Johnson told Reuters.

"There's not enough hose and water to put out a fire in these conditions."

Firefighters raced to set controlled fires, designed to deny the advancing wall of flames the fuel it needs, "so we can manage the fire instead of the fire managing us," Johnson said.

Iran F-14 fighter jets operating despite US sanctions

TEHERAN, 12 June—Top Iranian Air Force commander Aziz Nasirzadeh said Saturday the F-14 fighter jets of Iran's Air Force continue to operate despite Washington's sanctions and restrictions, the English language satellite Press TV reported.

"Although there exist restrictions and sanctions on Iran regarding the procurement of equipment in all sectors, these sanctions are double as severe when it comes to F-14 fighter jets because the aircraft was only used in the US and Iran," said Nasirzadeh.

"Today, technicians at the Republic of Iran's Air Force do reverse engineering, and all parts required by this kind of fighter jet are made or upgraded inside the country and installed on the aircraft," he said.

Upgraded and improved, F-14 fighter jets in Iran are used for training and conduct tactical drills on a regular basis, said the commander.

Total lunar eclipse next week, not visible in US

LOS ANGELES, 12 June—The year's first total eclipse of the moon will last an unusually long time, a rare celestial treat for a wide swath of the globe.

Except if you're in the United States and Canada. North America will be left out of Wednesday's lunar spectacle, which will be visible from start to finish from eastern Africa, central Asia, the Middle East and western Australia — weather permitting.

The period when Earth's shadow completely blocks the moon—known as totality—will last a whopping 1 hour and 40 minutes. The last time the moon was covered for this long was in July 2000, when it lasted 7 minutes longer than that.

The full moon normally glows from reflected sunlight. A total lunar eclipse occurs when the moon glides through the long shadow cast by the Earth and is blocked from the sunlight that illuminates it.

As the moon plunges deeper into the Earth's shadow, the disk will appear to gradually change colour, turning from silver to orange or red. This is because some indirect sunlight still reaches the moon after passing through the Earth's atmosphere, which scatters blue light. Only red light strikes the moon, giving it an eerie crimson hue.

It's difficult to predict the exact shade the moon will take, which will depend on how much dust and clouds are in the atmosphere during the eclipse.

Since the moon will pass close to the centre of the Earth's shadow, the total eclipse phase will be longer than usual, said NASA eclipse expert Fred Espenak at the Goddard Space Flight Centre in Maryland.

Dog dips' created on Itchen Navigation

HAMPSHIRE, (England) 12 June —Designated "dog dips" have been created to give dogs access to the historic English canal channel known as the Itchen Navigation, officials say.

A wildlife trust has been concerned about the environmental damage being done to the waterway by dogs trampling vegetation, eroding the bank and disturbing wildlife as they get in and out of the water, the BBC reported Saturday.

The Hampshire and Isle of Wight Wildlife Trust put in "dog dips" at Shawford and Allbrook in hopes of minimizing the problem.

"We hope the dog

dips will reduce bank erosion and make the Navigation an even better place for wildlife," Ali Morse, Itchen Navigation project manager for the Hampshire & Isle of Wight Wildlife Trust, told the BBC.

Opened in 1710 as a commercial barge waterway, the Itchen Navigation is now a wildlife area noted for its water vole, otter, salmon and kingfisher populations.

Apple's next-gen MacBook Airs are in production

NEW YORK, 12 June—You might want to hold off on buying an Apple MacBook Air, a new one could be just around the corner.

Apple has reportedly placed an order with its Asian manufacturers for 380,000 next-generation MacBook Airs, equipped with Intel's newest Sandy Bridge processors, according to Concord Securities analyst Ming-Chi Kuo in a note obtained by AppleInsider.

Kuo said 55 percent of these new models be 11.6-inch versions and the rest will be 13.3-inch models. In addition, Kuo said Apple has scaled back production of current models, announced back in October 2010, to 80,000.

Kuo has been saying since April that Apple will launch its next MacBook Air in June or July. At the same time he said he expected the popular notebook would be equipped with Sandy Bridge processors and high-speed Thunderbolt transfer technology. In early May, Tapei newspaper DigiTimes cited sources saying the same. By late May, a Japanese blog reported that Apple was testing MacBook Airs with an A5 chip inside, the same chip used in the iPad 2 (though Steve Jobs has said once that Apple has no interest in building a netbook).

With the launch last week of iCloud and a download-only Mac OS X Lion, many are speculating that Apple will turn the MacBook Air into its next primary machine. Furthermore, as Tim Bajaran extracted from Intel's keynote speech at Computex this month, ultra-thin laptops may be the next big trend; Intel's followup from Sandy Bridge is a low-voltage, high-speed processors codenamed "Ivy Bridge".

Even though the technology inside current MacBook Airs is incredibly outdated compared to its MacBook Pro brethren, the premium-priced notebooks have been a boon for Apple. In March, Kuo (again) told AppleInsider that Apple shipped about 1.1 million of the 13- and 15-inch MacBook Air laptops in the last three months of 2010, making it Apple's most successful Mac product launch.

For more, see PCMag's reviews of the MacBook Air 13.3-inch and MacBook Air 11.6-inch unveiled last October. But note that in April, Apple quietly began replacing the solid state drives (SSD) in the smaller MacBook Air models with faster ones.

Les Paul Google doodle gets standalone site

WASHINGTON, 12 June—Music fans, rejoice! The popularity of the playable Les Paul Google doodle has prompted the search engine to create a standalone site where users can play to their hearts' content.

"With all the great tunes you've created, we had to give the #LesPaul doodle a permanent home. Keep on rockin'!" Google tweeted Friday night.

You can find the site at google.com/logos/2011/lespaul.html. Play the logo just as you did on the Google.com homepage; US users can record and share their masterpieces.

The Thursday doodle, in honour of musician and electric guitar pioneer Les Paul, features the strings of a guitar in the shape of the Google logo. That logo is actually playable—strum it with your mouse and it plays a song. The concept is arguably now one of the search giant's most popular homepage creations. The company even left it up an additional day in the US due to popular demand.

Here in the PCMag offices, the newsroom was filled with the sounds of amateur musicians crafting their own masterpieces all day Thursday. We eventually asked Chris Phillips, PCMag's creative director and an actual musician, to play us a real song and he mapped out directions for using the doodle to play the Beatles' "Here Comes the Sun."—Internet

Prescription tracking estimates Parkinson's

TEL AVIV, 12 June—Much of the world lacks accurate figures for prevalence of Parkinson's disease, but Israeli researchers found a way of making an estimate.

Lead investigator Dr Nir Giladi of the Tel Aviv Sourasky Medical Centre and Tel Aviv University tracked pharmacy purchases of anti-Parkinson drugs to estimate the number of Parkinson's disease cases in a large population.

The study, published in the Journal of Parkinson's Disease, identified a sharp rise in Parkinson's disease in Israel—from 170/100,000 people in 2000 to 256/100,000 in 2007 — that warrants further investigation.

"Our proposed algorithm may be used as a reliable and low-cost tool to establish Parkinson's disease cohorts for epidemiological studies," Giladi says in a statement.

"Our findings of prevalence and incidence are higher than expected, and a rising number of Parkinson's disease patients in Israel reflect the growing burden of Parkinson's disease morbidity on Israeli health and social systems, and should be the base for national resource planning for the future."

Validity of baseline concussion tests questioned

NEW YORK, 12 June—Baseline concussion tests for athletes may do more harm than good in some cases, an expert warns.

Baseline concussion testing provides a baseline score of an athlete's cognitive abilities, such as reaction time, working memory and attention span.

Athletes who suffer a concussion retake the test, and if there is a large decrease in the score, they are typically banned from play until their score improves.

But the tests, which are mandatory for hundreds of thousands of amateur and professional athletes in the United States, have a high "false negative" rate, according to Christopher Randolph, a neuropsychologist at Loyola University Health System.

A false negative result means the test shows an athlete has recovered from a concussion when they're actually still experiencing effects from the injury.

As a result, an athlete might be allowed to return to play before it's safe.

Randolph analyzed the scientific literature and could not find a prospective, controlled study of the current version of the most common baseline concussion test, called ImPACT (Immediate Post-Concussion Assessment and Cognitive Testing). Athletes take the 20-minute test on a computer.

"There is no evidence to suggest that the use of baseline testing alters any risk from sport-related concussion, nor is there even a good rationale as to how such tests might influence outcome," Randolph wrote in an article published in a recent issue of the journal Current Sports Medicine Reports.

Instead of relying on baseline concussion tests, medical staff on sports teams "may be better advised to rely upon their own clinical judgment, in conjunction with a validated symptom checklist, in making return-to-play decisions," for athletes who have suffered a concussion, Randolph suggested.

DETROIT, 12 June—GM has gone nationwide with its 2012 Chevrolet Volt and is now taking orders for the extended-range electric car from all states.

The company also announced Friday the base price has been cut by $1,000 to $39,995, the Detroit Free Press reported. Buyers may be able to reduce the price more with a $7,500 federal tax credit.

GM has added four option packages.

The 2011 Volt had been available on a more limited basis in eight states and Washington, DC, with only three option packages.

The Volt has a 35-mile range on its battery, which is backed up by a gasoline-powered generator.

GM plans to add two shifts with 2,500 more employees at its Detroit-Hamtramck plant, where the Volt is produced.

Rob Peterson, a GM spokesman, said the top price for a Volt with all options will be $46,265.

Ford ordered to pay $2b to truck dealers

CLEVELAND, 12 June—A judge in Ohio said Ford Motor Co owed commercial truck dealerships $2 billion, upholding a February ruling in a new class-action suit.

In February, a jury awarded $4.5 million to Westgate Ford, a Youngstown, Ohio, dealership.

As a class-action suit, Judge Peter Corrigan of the Cuyahoga County Common Pleas Court in Cleveland used the same formula from the first case to award $800 million in damages plus $1.2 billion in interest, The New York Times reported Saturday.

The suit involved about 3,100 dealerships and about 475,000 trucks from 1987 to 1998.

The suit hinges on Ford's discount programme for selling commercial trucks, a category that includes bulldozers and tractor-trailers.

Ford set the prices too high for customers, then awarded dealerships discounts so they could make a profit, the Times said.

Ford said it "caused no harm to our dealers," and would appeal the ruling.

But attorney James Lowe said Ford was playing a game.

"The dealers who called to get these special discounts thought they were getting a deal, but they weren't. No dealer knew what any other dealer was paying," he said.

Mysterious mountain lion killed in Connecticut

BOSTON, 12 June—A mountain lion was killed just 70 miles from New York City early on Saturday morning and officials were trying to determine if it was the same big cat spotted a week ago roaming the posh suburb of Greenwich, Connecticut.

The 140-pound

mountain lion was hit by a small SUV on a highway in Milton, Connecticut early Saturday morning, and died from its injuries.

The driver was unhurt, officials said.

With no native mountain lion population in the state, "it's possible and even likely" it is the same enormous cat with a long tail spotted last weekend in the New York City suburb some 30 miles away, said Department of Environmental Protection spokesman Dennis Sc-hain.

The large cat was transferred to a state environmental facility where authorities will use the photos, paw prints and other evidence collected near the three Greenwich sightings to determine if it is the same animal.

Travelling between the two cities would be a jog for this large cat known to roam extensively, even up to a couple hundred miles in a day, said Schain.

Hawkins, convicted of first-degree murder Friday, exhibited no emotion when as Judge Chris Craft read his punishment aloud. No date was set for his execution.

Hawkins had told police his 12-year-old daughter had killed Charlene Gaither, 28, on 9 Feb, 2008, at their Memphis apartment and he had dismembered and disposed of her stabbed and strangled body to protect the girl.

But all three of his daughters testified against him and the one daughter, now 15, testified he had sexually abused her. "I got some justice for my child, for my baby," Gaither's father Louis Irvin said after the punishment was announced.

Forum to discuss desertification, business opportunities in China

BEIJING, 12 June—More than 500 scholars, entrepreneurs and officials from both home and abroad are expected to convene in north China's Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region next month to discuss the prevention of desertification and seek opportunities for emerging industries in the region, organizers said.

The Kubuqi International Desert Forum is scheduled to run from 8 to 10 July at a scenic area located in the Kubuqi Desert, one of China's largest deserts, said Wang Wenbiao, secretary-general of the forum's organizing committee.

Attendees will include officials from the Chinese government, leaders and representatives from the United Nations and other international organizations, as well as experts, academics and entrepreneurs, Wang said.

He said the forum will offer a platform for Chinese and foreign experts to share ideas concerning innovations in desertification-related technology, regional poverty alleviation, climate change and tourism related to desertification.

According to the organizing committee, desertified areas around the globe expand by about 50,000 to 70,000 square km each year, with desertified areas totaling 38 million square km, or one-fourth of the Earth's total land area.

"Desertification has become a global issue, threatening more than 1 billion people in 110 countries and leading to annual economic losses worth 42 billion US dollars," Wang said.

China is highly vulnerable to desertification, as about one-third of China's total land area is already desertified, according to the country's forestry authorities.

Bill Gates in China push against secondhand smoke

BEIJING, 12 June—Microsoft founder and philanthropist Bill Gates is visiting China to raise awareness of the dangers of secondhand smoke.

Gates appeared at a news conference in Beijing on Saturday alongside Chinese Internet executive Robin Li and Vice Health Minister Huang Jiefu to encourage nonsmokers to stand up for their right to a smoke-free environment.

According to government statistics, smoking is linked to the deaths of at least 1 million people in China every year, making it one of the greatest health threats the country faces. Nearly 30 percent of adults in China smoke — about 300 million people, a number roughly equal to the entire US population. The risks of secondhand smoke include increased asthma attacks, ear and respiratory infections, and cancer.—Internet

Chile volcano ash grounds Australia, NZ flights

WELLINGTON, 12 June—Thousands of passengers in Australia and New Zealand were affected when airlines suspended flights Sunday as an ash cloud from an erupting volcano in southern Chile spread, threatening to damage engines.

Australia's national carrier, Qantas Airways, said all the airline's flights in and out of the southeastern city of Melbourne would be grounded.

Qantas also canceled 22 flights to and from New Zealand and the Australian island-state of Tasmania, as well as eight flights within New Zealand's South Island, as the dust cloud from Chile's erupting Cordón Caulle volcano spread across the atmosphere. About 8000 people would be affected by the cancellations, a Qantas spokeswoman said.

Virgin Australia later announced it was suspending 34 domestic flights and one international one from Melbourne on Sunday evening.

"We have been closely monitoring the situation all day," Virgin's Sean Donohue said in a statement. "Safety is always our number one priority."

Australian budget carrier Jetstar said it canceled domestic flights to New Zealand's South Island airports.

National carrier Air New Zealand did not cancel or delay any flights but has adjusted flight routes and altitudes to ensure aircraft remain clear of any ash, company spokeswoman Tracy Mills said. The drifting clouds of fine grit can severely damage airplane engines.—Internet

Arsenic scare prompts evacuation in Australia

SYDNEY, 12 June—Australian officials on Sunday urged residents and visitors to a remote outback cattle station to leave, after a number were found to have high levels of arsenic in their blood.

The Northern Territory coroner has declared Mount Bundy Station, 130 kilometres (80 miles) south of Darwin, a restricted area and called for the 140 residents to be evacuated.

"The evacuation was a precautionary measure to ensure people's safety and limit any further people from being potentially exposed to the arsenic source," Darwin Police Commander Kym Davies said.

A 17-year-old boy from Mount Bundy Station died in May, and while no official cause of death has been identified, arsenic poisoning is thought to have contributed to the death.

Eight other long-term residents of the station have been found to have elevated levels of arsenic in their system, police said, adding that the cattle station would remain closed until the arsenic source was found.

"Prolonged exposure is usually needed to record elevated levels of arsenic," said Northern Territory Chief Health Officer Doctor Barbara Paterson. "All of the eight people who have recorded elevated arsenic levels have received medical attention and will be offered follow-up attention."

Indian nuclear plants pose no health hazard

NEW DELHI, 12 June—India's state-owned Nuclear Power Corporation Saturday said that the operation of nuclear power plants in the country poses no health hazard to the surrounding population.

"The operation of nuclear power plants poses no health hazard to the surrounding population. Indeed the radiation dose to the public at all nuclear power plants over the years has been a very small fraction of the limit stipulated by the Atomic Energy Regulatory Board," said the company in a statement to the media.

"There has been no measurable increase in the rate of cancers in the population as a result of operation of nuclear power plants," the company said.

The statement came in the wake of doubts which were expressed in a section of media over the radiation level at Kaiga nuclear power plant, which recently saw a fire alarm go off due to a technical snag in a power generating unit.

situated at Kaiga, near the river Kali, in Uttar Kannada District of Karnataka, southern India. The plant has been in operation since March 2000 and is operated by the Nuclear Power Corporation of India.

NEW YORK, 12 June—Few instruments can be gentler than the harp, but authorities in New York's Central Park have branded street musicians like harpist Meta Epstein a public disturbance and want them driven out.

Park police, she said, accused her of destroying the grass where she sat and ordered her to move on.

Surging household debts emerge as biggest threat to S Korean economy

SEOUL, 12 June—South Korea's household debts have recently surged to a fresh record-high, emerging as the biggest threat to the country's economic recovery.

Rising household debts can boost private consumption in the short term, but it may end up hurting economic growth due to increasing burden for interest payments.

Outstanding household credit, including loans from banks and non-banking financial institutions as well as credit card spending, grew 8.4 percent on-year to 801.4 trillion won (739.98 billion US dollars) in the first quarter, according to the Bank of Korea (BOK).

That was the fastest quarterly growth in credit since a 9.1 percent on-year expansion in the fourth quarter of 2008, and an identical number with the fourth quarter of last year. Household credit topped 800 trillion won mark for the first time.

The accelerating growth in credit was attributable to low interest rates and financial institutions' efforts to competitively expand their lending.

Large areas of packed snow that cap mountains in Utah are a boon for skiers, but could spell disaster for residents living at the foothills.

The snowcaps, that can only be reached by snow vehicles, are expected to melt in the summer months.

Emily Moench, Communications Manager, Snow bird Resort, said, "Last year the season ended about the second week of June and this year we are hoping to go all the way to the fourth of July."

Experts worry that melting snowpacks pose a quiet but deadly threat to several states in the West.

World Economic Forum on East Asia opened in Indonesia

JAKARTA, 12 June—The World Economic Forum on East Asia was officially opened in Indonesia's capital city of Jakarta on Sunday by President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono, in which he stressed the importance of Asian strength in helping the world in sustaining a strong and sustainable economic growth. Yudhoyono said that Asia's moment has come with a much brighter future lying ahead. "But we cannot take these things for granted." He suggested several ways for Asia to become a continent of the future.

First, he said, Asia must be part of the solution to address the global imbalances. He said the world's economy cannot afford to rely on strong growth in emerging economies alone. "We need healthy growth globally, including the developed world. One way or another, we all need to make structural adjustments to correct the global imbalances. Asia — more than any other regions — can help achieve a strong, sustainable and balanced world economy. Asia must also lead the way to keep markets and societies open," he said.

Second, he said, Asia needs to anticipate and address the growing pressures that will come from food, energy and water insecurity.

"Of the 7 billion people that now inhabit our planet, 60 percent live in Asia. As their economies grow, they will seek and compete for finite natural resources, a pattern that in previous centuries led to wars, conquest, exploitation and untold suffering. In our time, these issues need not lead to conflict," he said.—Xinhua

All work, no play makes phys ed a dull bore, experts say

BEIJING, 12 June—Experts are calling for the reform of physical education in elementary and secondary schools, which has been criticized for failing to stir students' interest and relying on uncreative methods.

"China started reforming the basic education curriculum as early as 2001. Many out-of-date teaching concepts have been replaced over the past decade," said Ji Liu, president of the College of Physical Education and Health at the Shanghai-based East China Normal University. Ji is also the group leader for the national primary and middle school physical education curriculum design.

"But the state of affairs with physical education is unsatisfactory in terms of teaching content, methods, students' learning awareness, and the physical evaluation system." In Western countries, students can choose to be involved through their schools in a sport that interests them, and the whole teaching environment is relaxed, free and cheerful.

Over 600 people, including 103 children, poisoned by lead in east China

HANGZHOU, 12 June—More than 600 people, including 103 children, have been found to be suffering from lead poisoning in east China's Zhejiang Province, according to local health authorities.

Workers at 25 family-run tinfoil processing workshops in the township of Yangxunqiao, located in the province's Shaoxing County, have dangerously high levels of lead in their blood, according to results from a preliminary medical test. Several of the workers' children also have high levels of lead, according to the results.

Results from the test showed that 26 adults and 103 children are suffering from severe lead poisoning, said a spokesman with the county's health bureau. Severe lead poisoning is defined as having more than 600 micrograms of lead per liter of blood for an adult and more than 250 micrograms for a child, said the spokesman. The 129 poisoning victims are undergoing a second test, and 12 of them are receiving treatment at a local hospital, the spokesman said, adding that those confirmed to be suffering from severe lead poisoning will be treated for free.

Another 494 people have been found to be suffering from moderate lead poisoning, which is defined as having 400 to 600 micrograms of lead per liter of blood, the spokesman said. Lead is commonly used in tinfoil processing. Workers and their family members, including children, are frequently exposed to lead materials in the family-run workshops in Yangxunqiao. However, China has not yet formulated standards for the use of lead in tinfoil processing.—Xinhua

Guinness names Filipino as world's shortest man

A Guinness World Records representative has declared the son of a poor Filipino locksmith who measured 23.5 inches (60 centimeters) tall as the world's shortest man.

Guinness official Craig Glenday says Junrey Balawing, who

Australian penny sells for more than $1.5m

An Australian coin dealer said the economy has not damaged the investment coin market, allowing her to sell a 1930 penny for more than $1.5 million.

Belinda Downie of Coinworks said the coin, one of six proof pennies minted in 1930, was sold to an unidentified buyer for an amount she would only identify as more than $1.5 million, the Sydney Morning Herald reported Friday.

"These proof pennies were never intended for circulation but instead created as museum pieces," Downie said. "It's a totally separate process. These are produced in an artistic environment from hand-selected blanks."

Downie said the market for rare coins has remained strong due to the high demand and low supply.

Two mountain peaks going cheap in Austria

Are you the outdoors type, a die-hard hill walker with cash to spare? Then you won't want to miss out on the chance to buy your very own mountain peaks in the Austrian Alps.

Two 2,000-metre (6,500-foot) mountain peaks in eastern Tyrol — the "Grosse Kinigat" and the "Rosskopf" — are up for sale for just 121,000 euros ($175,800) for the pair. On its website, Austria's federal real estate company, the Bundesimmobiliengesellschaft or BIG, proudly boasts that the two peaks offer the "most stunning views of the Carnic Alps and are popular destinations for mountain climbers and hikers".

Nevertheless, the decision to put them up for sale has angered locals.

"It's a mystery to me why they're wanting to sell the peaks right now," the mayor of the tiny village of Kartitsch, Josef Ausserlechner, told the Austrian news agency APA.

"In Greece, they're selling off islands. In Austria, it's the mountains," he fumed. Ausserlechner insisted the village of Kartitsch has right of first refusal, but could only afford to pay a symbolic price of "a couple of thousand of euros".

S Korea's Pororo penguin takes flight worldwide

SEOUL, 12 June—South Korean animator Choi Jong-Il knew he had a hit on his hands when Pororo the penguin hopped onto TV screens back in 2003.

Choi's previous creations had failed to grab the undivided attention of his six-year-old son and his son's friends.

That all changed when the mischievous but affectionate blue and white penguin, sporting aviator glasses and a flying helmet, made his debut.

"The kids' eyes were glued to the TV...they never touched other toys as long as Pororo was on," Choi told AFP in an interview.

Pororo, whose dream is to fly, has taken off big-time since then. In South Korea he has been dubbed the "children's president" and his image

Japan 3-D pop avatar a real-world hit

TOKYO, 12 June—Japanese teenage pop sensation Miku Hatsune has millions of smitten fans, a string of top hits and an image entirely unblemished by drug use, scandals or celebrity meltdowns.

She doesn't demand six-figure recording contracts, always shows up on time, never throws tantrums and won't break a sweat during a two-hour live show in a concert hall packed with thousands of adoring followers.

Too good to be true? Yes and no. Miku Hatsune is a 3-D computer animation. The collaborative brainchild of software developers, a manga comic artist and a vast digital fan community, the virtual singer from outer space has become one of the hottest stars on the J-pop scene. Next month she's giving her debut US concert, the "Mikunopolis" show on 2 July at the Anime Expo 2011 in Los Angeles.

Miku may not, technically, be real, but that didn't stop several thousand fans, most of them young men, from flocking to her latest live gig in Tokyo, where the android star enthralled her audience from an onstage screen.

Power still IndyCar leader over Dario, both win

FORT WORTH, 12 June — Will Power got the luck of the draw, then the IndyCar Series points leader made a quick evasive move to avoid disaster before his final stop on Saturday night for his first victory on an oval.

Dario Franchitti went from winning the opener of the first doubleheader in major open-wheel racing in 30 years to pure frustration after losing ground to Power in the season standings.

After Franchitti led 110 of 114 laps in the opener en route to his 28th career victory, the starting spots for the second race were determined by a blind draw.

Power, who finished third in the opener, started third and Franchitti was 28th in the 30-car field before working his way to a seventh-place finish.
