Do research on scientific farming

In bringing about development of agriculture and rural economy of Myanmar, most of those engaging in rural-based agriculture, fish and meat and forestry businesses are farmers who occupy 70 per cent of population of the nation.

Today, all the countries are striving for ensuring food sufficiency of global people applying bio-technology and Nano technology. In doing so, Myanmar is to conduct research on high yield seeds of crops for cultivation and production purposes with the aim of competing in the international market and producing more food.

For growing crops applying good cultivation methods, agriculturists and agricultural companies share technologies to the farmers by establishing model agricultural educative farms.

It is necessary to feed chemical fertilizers and natural fertilizers to crops on time to apply high yield quality crops and systematic cultivation methods for ensuring better quality of various crops.

Continuous researches are to be conducted for improvement of systematic cultivation methods so as to boost production of crops. Agriculturists, staff and agricultural companies shared outcomes of research to farmers at the fields, and thus, farmers are to join hands with the agriculturists so as to achieve food sufficiency due to boosting production.

Bombs kill 11; shell misses Afghan vice president

MAIDAN SHAR, 15 June—Suicide bombings near an Afghan governor's office and an administrative building killed 11 people Wednesday, while a mortar shell narrowly missed one of the country's vice presidents at a police training centre outside the capital. Attacks by Taliban-led insurgents are increasingly killing, wounding or narrowly missing senior Afghan government and NATO officials.

In the northeast, a suicide bomber exploded about 220 yards (200 metres) from the office of Governor Azizul Rahman Tawab, killing four police officers and four civilians, said provincial spokesman Halim Ayar.

Another suicide bomber killed three civilians, including a 13-year-old boy, in an attack against an administrative building in Paktia province, a restive area of eastern Afghanistan.

The mortar strike in central Wardak province, near the capital of Kabul, did not cause casualties, but it crashed down just next to a building where Afghanistan's second vice president, Mohammed Karim Khalili, and Interior Minister Bismillah Khan Mohammadi were attending a police ceremony along with NATO officials.

American found among mass graves victims in Mexico

MEXICO CITY, 15 June—An American was found among the 193 corpses recovered in April in mass graves in Mexico near the US border, a US official said Tuesday.

Mexican authorities identified the remains of an American in San Fernando, a town 85 miles (137 kilo-metres) from the border with Brownsville, Texas, and alerted the US State Department, said a State Department official who declined to be named because he was not authorized to speak on the record.

The official did not identify the victim because the family has not authorized it.

Mexican officials said many of the victims buried in the mass graves in San Fernando were mi-grants heading to the US who were kidnapped off pass-engers buses, killed and buried by the Zetas drug cartel.

The US consulate in Matamoros, across the border from Brownsville, released a message when the graves were being unearthed saying the consulate had received three reports from US citizens or their families regarding buses being boarded by criminals.

"In at least one instance, male bus passengers, including an American citizen, were forcibly removed from those buses and have yet to be located," the message said.

It is not known whether the US citizen the consulate reported missing was the one found in one of the 47 pits excavated.

How to make Windows faster

One of the greatest things about buying a new Windows computer is turning it on for the first time and being amazed at just how fast it is. It starts up quickly, and when you click to open a programme, it pops up nearly instantaneously. You can run multiple programmes and keep a dozen web browser tabs open, and it still runs quickly — and it even shuts down in a matter of seconds!

But then... your new computer starts to slow down. First, it takes a little longer to boot up, but gradually the entire system grows sluggish, and eventually it gets to the stage where you have time to make a cup of coffee while your web browser loads. Your once-snappy computer has become old.

Fortunately, by performing a few simple tasks, you can speed it back up again. You may not get it back to its good-as-new speed — and even if you do, as the state of the art marches forward, it will still seem a little slow compared to newer and more powerful equipment — but you can definitely squeeze a few more months (or even years) out of it.

Before we start

For the most part, making the current versions of Windows (especially Vista and Win7) faster will require you to disable some features. In most cases, you won't even notice these features are gone, but you should still proceed with caution. If your computer is really, really slow, it's probably better to get a handyman in to fix it — or maybe consider it time to upgrade your entire system.

First steps

To begin with, your best bet is to disable the Windows eye candy. After all, what good is a pretty interface if it's unusably slow?

Click the Start (Flag) button, right click Computer, and select Properties. Click "Advanced system settings" and then, underneath the Performance section, click the Settings button. Select the "Adjust for best performance" radio button and click OK.

Click OK again and you're done. This will make Windows look rather plain — a lot like Windows 98, in fact — but it should make your computer feel a lot faster, too.

Next, we're going to disable indexing, a feature that speeds up Windows' Search functionality. If you regularly use search to find documents and photos on your hard drive, you probably want to skip this step, however. Click the Start (Flag) button, type "indexing options" and then press Enter. Click Modify, and you'll be shown a list of locations that are indexed by your computer. Remove the check mark from all of the boxes and click OK.

Aggressive action

With those easy steps out of the way, you should now defragment and clean up your hard drive. After that, clear your computer of malware. These processes can take up to a few hours and may require that you stop using your computer while they run, but you can set them up before you go to bed and let them run overnight.

If you use a laptop or netbook, you can opt to squeeze a bit more performance out of your computer at the expense of shorter battery life; if you work with your laptop plugged in, you need not worry. Click the Start (Flag) button, type "power options" and press Enter. On the next screen, select the "High performance" radio button. Desktop users can also enable "High performance," but the performance boost will probably be less dramatic. You can also customize your power plan to change behaviors based on whether your computer is operating on AC or battery power; we'll cover doing that another time.

Finishing touch

Finally, we're going to disable programmes that automatically run when your computer starts. This can be a little dangerous, but it's also one of the best ways to speed up your computer — so proceed with caution!

Click the Start (Flag) button, type "mscon-fig" and press Enter. Click the Startup tab and you will see a (probably huge) list of programmes that load when you start your computer up. Now... the trick is to disable as many nonimportant programmes as possible. The problem is, there's no hard-and-fast way to work out which programmes are non-essential. Basically, if it sounds important, don't disable it. If the programme has "monitor" in the name or "updater", you can go ahead and disable it. If there's anything you don't recognize, go ahead and disable that too. If you're unsure, you can type the name of the programme into Google — you'll be surprised at the wealth of information that you can find, even about the most esoteric of Startup items. When you're done, click OK. The next time you turn on or reboot your computer, it should boot up a lot faster.—Internet

Google agrees to buy on-line ad firm

Admeld

SAN FRANCISCO, 15 June—Google on Monday confirmed that it had signed an agreement to buy Admeld, an on-line advertising optimization firm, in a deal seen as the Internet search giant's latest move to bolster its on-line display ad business.

Admeld, launched in 2007 and headquartered in New York City, has developed a service that can help on-line publishers manage their ad space more efficiently and profitably.

Admeld now has more than 500 customers worldwide, among them are FOX News, IDG TechNetwork, Discovery and The Weather Channel, according to information posted on its website. "By combining Admeld's services, expertise and technology with Google's offerings, we're investing in what we hope will be an improved era of flexible ad management tools for major publishers," Neal Mohan, Google's vice president of display advertising, said in a blog post announcing the deal. "We believe that this investment will be an important step to help on-line publishers, and will further improve and grow the display advertising industry as a whole," Mohan noted.

On-line display ads usually appear in forms that consist of images and may be interactive. According to the Interactive Advertising Bureau, a US trade association, display-related on-line ad revenue in the United States totaled nearly 10 billion US dollars in 2010.

Japan's ageing pets spark elderly care boom

TOKYO, 15 June— Pets are said to be like their owners, and in fast-ageing Japan a generation of greying pooches and tabbies has sparked a boom in elderly care for the four-legged friends.

Better pet food and veterinary services have allowed dogs and cats to live longer, spawning an industry that ranges from animal diapers and walking aids to 24-hour emergency care and research into pet tissue-engineering. The market is huge. Japanese keep 22 million dogs and cats, according to the latest data from the Japan Pet Food Association — outnumbering children aged under 15 by about 30 percent.

Japan's population has been declining since 2007 and the country is greying, with one of the world's lowest birth rates and highest life expectancies. Children under 15 now make up just 13 percent of the population while almost one quarter of Japanese are 65 or older, according to recent demographic data. Japan's pet business, including retail sales of the animals themselves and food and other products, is worth about 1.37 trillion yen (17 billion dollars) a year, according to the Yano Research Institute.

Many owners say they want to take care of their beloved pets until the very end rather than opt for euthanasia.

"Do you put an end to a family member's life because you are inconvenienced?" asked Michiko Ozawa, 67, recounting how she nursed her dog, a mongrel named Shiro, as he became senile and finally died. After more than a decade together, she opted against having 17-year-old Shiro put down, even though he had lost his vision and started walking in circles and dropping onto his backside rather than walk.—Internet

TV-watching boosts heart, diabetes, death risks

WASHINGTON, 15 June— A review of published studies in the past 40 years has shown a higher risk of diabetes, heart problems and early death among people who watch lots of television, US researchers said Tuesday.

The results of the meta-analysis performed by scientists at the Harvard School of Public Health are published in the 15 June issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

More than two hours per day of TV-watching boosted risk of type two diabetes and heart disease, while more than three hours a day increased a person's risk of dying prematurely.

Each two-hour increment in viewing per day was linked to a 20 percent higher risk for type two diabetes; a 15 percent increased risk for fatal or nonfatal cardiovascular disease; and a 13 percent higher risk for all-cause mortality.

"While the associations between time spent viewing TV and risk of type two diabetes and cardiovascular disease were linear, the risk of all-cause mortality appeared to increase with TV viewing duration of greater than three hours per day," the study said.

The habit of plunking oneself down in front of the television and watching for hours makes up about five hours of daily activity on average in the United States, but is also a prevalent practice around the world.

In Europe, people spend about 40 percent of their daily free time — or three hours — in front of the tube, and in Australia the average is 50 percent of daily free time or four hours, the study said.—Internet

Eurozone finance ministers fail to agree on new aid for Greece

BRUSSELS, 15 June— Finance ministers of eurozone countries failed to agree on a new financing plan for Greece at an emergency meeting Tuesday, fighting over the degree of private sector involvement in additional rescue for Athens.

"There has been no result," German Finance Minister Wolfgang Schauble told reporters after talks in Brussels which ended late Tuesday.

The emergency meeting of eurozone finance ministers had been called to build consensus on the degree of private sector involvement in the new rescue plan for debt-laden Greece.

Germany, Europe's paymaster, has insisted on significant involvement of private bondholders if further aid to Greece has to be delivered.

Schauble said last week that the holders of Greek debt should be forced to extend the maturities of their debt by seven years to prevent bankruptcy, a move credit rating agencies said may amount to a default.

Germany's position was backed by The Netherlands.

The European Central Bank (ECB), however, warned that any forced involvement of private bondholders would create chaos in the financial markets. Instead, the ECB, supported by the European Commission and France, is pushing for a plan under which bondholders voluntarily agree to buy new Greek bonds to replace maturing debts, thus giving Greece longer periods to pay back.

Ecuador, Turkey begin talks on trade agreement

QUITO, 15 June — Ecuador and Turkey on Tuesday began the first round of negotiations for a trade development agreement.

The negotiations started in the Turkish Capital of Ankara, and talks were held between delegations of both countries. Ecuador's Foreign Ministry said in a statement. Ecuador intended to reach an agreement with favourable conditions for both sides as early as this year, Ecuador's chief negotiator Mentor Villagomez said.

"We encourage the agreement in order to boost bilateral exchange, for which there is great potential," Villagomez said in a statement.

Ecuador and Turkey first broached the subject in 2010 and decided to start formal negotiations that could in the medium term lead to a trade agreement between both countries. Ecuador wanted to open new markets and diversify exports to reduce its trade deficit. Ecuador's Central Bank recently reported that the country's trade deficit in 2010 was 1.46 billion US dollars, which accounted for 12 to 13 percent of Ecuador's gross domestic product.—Xinhua

Emerging markets to redefine global economy by 2025

JAKARTA, 15 June—Six major emerging economies of Indonesia, Brazil, China, India, South Korea and Russia will account for more than half of all global growth by 2025, a World Bank's official said here on Wednesday.

Mansoor Dailami, manager of emerging trend at the World Bank, said that these emerging economies will grow on average by 4.7 percent a year between 2011 and 2025. "On the other hand, advanced economies are forecast to grow by only 2.3 percent over the same period, but will remain prominent in global economy," said Dailami in a seminar here. He said that the projected changes in the global economy are likely to be positive for developing countries. "However, a key question is whether existing multilateral norms and institutions can accommodate the passage toward multi polarity," he said.—Xinhua

High brain waves linked to better memory recall

WASHINGTON, 15 June—An Indian-origin scientist and his team have explained why our brains recall past things better at some times than at others.

“It’s been assumed that the process of retrieving a memory is cued by an external stimulus. But we found that the levels of brain activity before items came up were correlated with memory,” said Charan Ranganath, professor at the UC Davis Centre for Neuroscience and Department of Psychology.

Ranganath and his team including graduate students Richard Addante and Andrew Watrous, Andrew Yonelinas-professor of psychology at the UC Davis Centre for Mind and Brain, and Arne Ekstrom-assistant professor of psychology at the Centre for Neuroscience, measured a particular frequency of brainwaves called theta oscillations in the brains of volunteers during a memory test.

Theta waves are associated with a brain that is actively monitoring something, Ranganath said.

In the memory test, the volunteers had to memorize a series of words with a related context.

They later had to recall whether they had seen the word previously and the context in which the word was seen.

High theta waves immediately before being prompted to remember an item were associated with better performance.

The work goes against the assumption that the brain is waiting to react to the external world, noted Ranganath.

In fact, most of the brain is busy with internal activity that is not related to the outside world – and when external stimuli come in, they interact with these spontaneous patterns of activity.

The study was published in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, on 13 June.

Britain becoming increasingly lonely place for its people

LONDON, 15 June—A research has shown that Britain is becoming an increasingly lonely place for many people.

According to Opinium Research, the demands of modern life have led Britons to feel miserable, as they are unable to see family members on a regular basis.

Feelings of loneliness are now affecting their health – they are feeling isolated, depressed, anxious and sad.

Mental health experts have warned that the younger generation is most at risk.

Of those who said they were lonely, the biggest group was under 30 – 23 percent compared with a national average of 15 percent.

This is despite social networking sites like Facebook.

‘Superfruit’ Himalayan berry helps boost brain, fight obesity and ageism

LONDON, 15 June—The sea buckthorn berry, which is grown in the Himalayan mountains, has hit shop shelves as a new superfruit to rival broccoli, apples and blueberries.

The berry, which contains vitamins A, B1, B2, E and up to 10 times the amount of Vitamin C found in oranges, is said to boost the brain function.

Antioxidants in the berries also help to fight obesity, teeth problems, acne, ageism, poor digestion and constipation. It is also said to keep the heart healthy. Aside from the berry, the leaves and stem can be used to treat skin diseases.

Known to be the healthiest berries available, it is already a huge hit in the US where it has been hailed as a slimming aid.

It is now available in the UK as the drink Pep. “The grocery trade has been asking us to innovate. This ingredient is new to the UK market,” the Daily Express quoted Simon Hardy, of Drinks Brokers, as saying.

Type 2 diabetes ups risk of recurrent stroke and heart problems

WASHINGTON, 15 June—In a new study, type 2 diabetes was found associated with an increased risk of recurrent stroke or cardiovascular events among patients who have had an ischemic stroke or transient ischemic attack (TIA).

“Type 2 diabetes mellitus is associated with increased risks of both stroke and coronary heart disease (CHD),” said the study authors.

To come to the conclusion, Alfred Callahan from Vanderbilt University, Nashville, and colleagues evaluated the risk of recurrent stroke or cardiovascular events in patients with type 2 diabetes or metabolic syndrome MetS.

In total, the study included 4,731 participants who had experienced an ischemic stroke or TIA.

The researchers classified 794 individuals as having type 2 diabetes, 642 as having MetS and the remaining 3,295 as having neither condition.

Patients with type 2 diabetes were more likely than those in the control group to experience another stroke, major cardiovascular incident, or revascularization procedure.

Those in the MetS group were not at increased risk of stroke or major cardiovascular events, but were more likely than those in the control group to undergo revascularization procedures.—Internet

Come 2050, you can play golf in fully transparent plane in open skies!

LONDON, 15 June—Airbus has unveiled a futuristic concept for a transparent plane that may be everyday air transport in 2050.

With its see-through aircraft cabin, passengers of the future will get a window on the world as they fly through the sky. They will be able to see everything to the sides and in front of them. The concept cabin unveiled at the Royal Observatory in Greenwich, London, would be a bionic structure that ‘mimics’ the efficiency of the bird bone, claimed the company.

It would provide strength where needed, and also allows for an intelligent’ cabin wall membrane, which controls air temperature and can become transparent to give passengers open, panoramic views. The company believes that mid-century passengers might be able to enjoy a game of virtual golf or take part in interactive conferences, while the cabin ‘identifies and responds’ to travellers’ needs. In the ‘interactive zone’ there are virtual pop-up projections taking passengers to whichever social scene they want to be in, from holographic gaming to virtual changing rooms for active shoppers. The ‘smart tech zone’ is tailored towards the more functional-orientated passenger with what Airbus describes as ‘a chameleon-style offering.’

It aims to meet individual needs ranging from a simple to a complete luxury service, but all allowing ‘you to continue life as if on the ground’.

“Our research shows that passengers of 2050 will expect a seamless travel experience while also caring for the environment,” the Daily Mail quoted Airbus engineering executive vice-president Charles Champion as saying.—Internet

First mother-daughter womb transplant planned

STOCKHOLM, 15 June—The world's first mother-daughter uterus transplant could take place next year in Sweden, the head of an international research team in the western Swedish city of Gothenburg said Tuesday.

"We have reached a stage where we have started to plan for a human transplant and we are investigating 10 pairs, most of those are mother and daughters," Mats Braenstroem told AFP, adding the first of such transplants could take place "hopefully at the beginning of next year."

He added that transplanting a womb from a woman to her daughter would be a world first, although a uterus transplant between two unrelated women took place in Saudi Arabia in 2002.

His international team of doctors at the Sahlgrenska University Hospital has been researching the subject for a decade and has tested it on animals, he said, explaining there were no particular complications in transplanting a womb from mother to daughter. WASHINGTON, 15 June—Getting six to nine hours of sleep per night is associated with higher ratings for quality of life and lower ratings for depression, suggests a research abstract that was presented Tuesday at SLEEP 2011, the 25th Anniversary Meeting of the Associated Professional Sleep Societies LLC in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Results show that people with a "normal" sleep duration of six to nine hours per night had higher self-reported scores for quality of life and lower scores for depression severity compared to short and long sleepers.

These differences were statistically significant in all comparisons. Among patients who reported having perfect health, there was a higher percentage of normal sleepers, who also had significantly lower scores for depression severity compared with short and long sleepers with perfect health.

"These results are important because they provide more information about the importance of getting enough sleep, which is usually six to nine hours per night," said principal investigator Charles Bae, neurologist at the Cleveland Clinic Sleep Disorders Centre in Ohio.—Xinhua

Recharged Ford sets sights on Asia

DETROIT, 15 June—With its turnaround in North America essentially finished, Ford Motor Co is looking to the next act in its comeback by building its business in Asia's emerging markets.

Ford plans to grow global sales by 50 percent over the next four years with a strong push into markets such as China and India, chief executive officer Alan Mulally said last week.

"We are rapidly making the transition from fixing the fundamentals of our business to delivering profitable growth in all of our operations," Mulally said in the company's recent annual report.

"To do this, we are investing in an unprecedented amount of new products and technology worldwide."

Ford's plans to target growing demand in emerging markets makes sense, said Jesse Toprak, an analyst with TrueCar.com. "Eighty percent of all growth will occur outside of North America. So it's smart to target growth in these markets," he told AFP.

Ford, which was the only major US automaker to survive the 2008 downturn without resorting to a government bailout and bankruptcy, has also profited from the troubles at General Motors and Chrysler.

Ford's rating was downgraded to junk status after it essentially mortgaged all its assets to fund a massive restructuring, but the number two US automaker has been able to revitalize its lineup and business practices much more rapidly than its Detroit rivals.—Internet

Asian markets down amid rate hike expectations

BANGKOK, 15 June—Asian stock markets mostly fell Wednesday as investors anticipated rate hikes by central banks in India and China to contain stubbornly high inflation.

Oil prices hovered above $99 a barrel after a report showed US crude inventories fell more than expected, suggesting demand may be improving. The dollar was lower against the yen but up against the euro.

Japan's Nikkei 225 stock average rose 0.1 percent to 9,561.30. Honda Motor Corp gained 1.3 percent a day after the company announced that vehicle production in Japan is expected to be back at nearly normal levels by later this month and, outside of Japan, by August or September.

Japanese manufacturing was disrupted by a huge earthquake and tsunami on 11 March but analysts say the recovery at Honda and other Japanese automakers has been remarkable.

Other markets fell amid expectations that China's central bank will go ahead with at least one more interest rate hike this month or next.

China's May's inflation rate of 5.5 percent was the highest since July 2008. Beijing has made taming price increases a priority but its measures could also slow growth in the world's second-largest economy.

Inflation is also buffeting India's economy, the third largest in Asia. The Reserve Bank of India, which has raised key policy rates nine times since March 2010 in an effort to tame inflation, is expected to raise rates again at a monetary policy review Thursday.

Two dead, several feared trapped after building collapses in Nairobi

NAIROBI, 15 June—At least two people were killed and several others are feared trapped after a building under construction collapsed in a suburb of Nairobi, the capital and largest city of Kenya, officials said on Tuesday.

The six-storey building along North Airport Road in Embakasi Constituency, which consists of the eastern and southeastern suburbs of Nairobi, collapsed at around 11 am local time. It is situated next to the Kenya Builders Company. “So far, two people have lost their lives while six others were rescued from the collapsed building and taken to Kenyatta National Hospital,” a spokesman for the Kenya Red Cross Society (KRCS) said. “There are fears that more people could still be trapped in the building.”

The relief agency said its personnel remains on the site and is working with others to coordinate the rescue and evacuation efforts. A photo from the scene showed hundreds of onlookers as rescue efforts continued.

The cause of the collapse was not immediately known.

Australian pilot killed after blimp bursts into flames, crashes in Germany

BERLIN, 15 June—A Goodyear blimp burst into flames Sunday evening in the western region of Germany, killing the pilot, while three passengers were able to survive the accident, local media reported.

Spiegel Online reported that fires broke out in both engines of the blimp as it was attempting to land in the town of Reichelsheim, in the district of Wetteraukreis, which is located in Hesse. The airship was being operated by tire company Goodyear.

It was not immediately clear what caused the accident, but German authorities have launched an investigation to determine the cause.

In May 1937, the German passenger airship the LZ 129 Hindenburg caught fire and crashed while attempting to dock at the Lakehurst Naval Air Station in New Jersey. Of the 97 people on board, 35 died. One person on the ground was also killed.

Japan finds radiation traces in whales

TOKYO, 15 June— Japanese whale hunters have found traces of radioactive caesium in two of the ocean giants recently harpooned off its shores in the Pacific Ocean, a fisheries agency official said Wednesday.

Two minke whales culled off the northern island of Hokkaido showed readings of 31 becquerels and 24.3 becquerels of caesium per kilogramme, he said, adding that the cause may be the accident at the Fukushima nuclear plant.

The level is far below the country's recently-set maximum safe limit for seafood of 500 becquerels per kilogramme, he said.

"There is no data available to compare whether the readings for radioactive materials are higher than normal," he said.

"We will continue to monitor the development, as we do for all seafood and marine life" that is caught off the Pacific coast, he said.

The Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear plant has leaked radioactive water into the Pacific since it was battered by the 11 March earthquake and tsunami, which disabled cooling systems, triggering reactor melt-downs and explosions.

The Japanese public and some marine life experts have voiced fears that radioactive material in the sea can concentrate among large marine creatures at the top of the food chain that live for a long time.

The government has banned fishing in areas near the crippled nuclear plant, and local governments and fishing cooperatives are conducting regular radiation screenings of seafood along the Pacific coast.

Japan hunts whales under a loophole to an international moratorium that allows killing the sea mammals for "scientific research".

Japan also argues that whaling is an integral part of the island-nation's culture, and whale meat is sold openly in shops and restaurants.

US man trapped in Russia for 77 yrs speaks English again after stroke

LONDON, 15 June— An American man who was trapped in the Soviet Union 77 years ago - and was forced to learn the Russian language to survive his epic Communist ordeal - has again started speaking in his native English after suffering a stroke.

Kenneth Edwards, now 95, recently suffered a stroke, which left him unable to communicate with his Russian family and children.

"I am having to learn Russian all over again," the Daily Mail quoted him as saying in a halting American accent.

"I say something in Russian to him, and he replies only in English," said his wife Zoya, 79. "I only understand what he wants to say by his intonation."

Edwards rarely used English after his idealistic left-wing father Willard moved his family from Alabama to the USSR in 1934.

His return to speaking English instead of his word perfect Russian has stunned local doctors.

In 1992, when he had a reunion in Moscow with his younger sister Marjorie, he had trouble speaking to her because he had forgotten much of his English. He had told her: "I have a Russian wife and Russian children. I speak only in Russian. I think only in Russian."—Internet

German E coli outbreak claims first child victim

BERLIN, 15 June— Germany's E coli outbreak claimed its first child fatality on Tuesday when a two-year-old died from the bacteria in the northern city of Hanover, taking the death toll to 37.

German health authorities have linked the epidemic, the deadliest of its kind in modern history, to contaminated bean sprouts and shoots from a German organic farm sold to consumers and restaurants across the country for eating in salads. Germany's main disease control centre, the Robert Koch Institute, said the number of new infections appeared to be on the wane.

More than 3,200 people have so far been taken ill with the E coli strain, about a quarter of them developing a complication called hemolytic uremic syndrome, which affects the blood, kidneys and nervous system. While cases have been reported in other countries, all have been traced back to visits to northern Germany and all but one of the fatalities have been in Germany.

271 Picasso works found with French couple

271 Picasso works

LONDON, 15 June — A French couple have been found to illegally possess 271 works by Spanish artist Pablo Picasso worth up to 80 million pounds (USD 131 million).

Pierre Le Guennec, 71, claimed Picasso gave him the vast treasure trove of paintings and sketches when he was working as an electrician at the artist's house in southern France, the Daily Express reported.

Le Guennec stashed them in his garage for nearly 40 years.

He and his wife Danielle reportedly took a suitcase full with paintings to Picasso's heirs in Paris in October last year to have them authenticated. Just after art experts proved the works were genuine, police swooped on the couple at their home in Mouans-Sartoux and arrested them on suspicion of receiving stolen goods. They were released without charge but an investigation has been launched. They are set to face trial later this month.—Internet

Ash forces flights to west Australia city canceled

SYDNEY, 15 June— Several airlines planned to ground flights to the western Australian City of Perth on Wednesday afternoon because of a volcanic ash cloud — announcements that came just as mainland air travel had been getting back to normal on the fourth day of disruptions.

More than 70,000 passengers had been at least temporarily stranded even before the latest cancellations.

The ash from a Chilean volcano has forced national carrier Qantas and budget airlines Jetstar and Tiger to cancel flights to and from the island state of Tasmania and New Zealand since Sunday. Flights to the southern cities of Melbourne and Adelaide also were canceled, but air travel to and from both cities was back to normal Wednesday.

Virgin Australia and Air New Zealand have continued service from mainland Australia to New Zealand and Tasmania by changing flight paths to avoid the ash cloud — a move Qantas said it would not take. But Virgin said Wednesday the ash would be too low to avoid on flights to and from Perth, which is the largest city in Australia's west and the gateway to the remote region. "The ash plume is forecast to be at a lower band level of approximately 15,000 feet and with this in mind, Virgin Australia will suspend all services into and out of Perth as a precautionary measure," Group Executive Sean Donohue said in a statement.—Internet

Bangladesh plans special force to protect tigers

DHAKA, 15 June — Bangladesh is setting up a special force to save the critically endangered Royal Bengal Tiger and other animals.

The 300-member force will be deployed mostly around the Sundarbans mangrove forests, one of the last refuges of the tigers.

The decision came months after they seized three tiger skins and a large quantity of bones, the biggest haul of illegal tiger parts in decades.

The Sundarbans forests stretch between Bangladesh and India. Around 400 tigers still live in the area. Until now poaching has not been considered as the chief threat to the tiger population in Bangladesh.

But the arrest of a poacher with tiger skins and bones earlier this year raised fears that an organised poaching group was operating in the mangrove forests.

Officials admitted they did not have enough manpower, resources and training to counter the poachers, who they said were using increasingly sophisticated techniques to trap the tigers.

Minister of Environment and Forests Hasan Mahmud said that the setting up of the new wildlife force was long overdue. "The forest department staff in Bangladesh need more training, because now the poachers are very sophisticated," he said.—Internet

Anthony van Dyck painting to be auctioned at Sotheby's

LONDON, 15 June — Sotheby's London is to auction a portrait of a monk, credited to Anthony van Dyck, that was previously thought to have been painted by Rubens. The work, owned by the same French family for at least 200 years, was known as Confesseur de Rubens. Sotheby's says experts noticed brushwork more characteristic of Rubens' pupil Van Dyck. Meanwhile, a dealer who rediscovered Van Dyck's A Portrait of a Young Girl, in 2010, has spoken of his find.

India sees cut in new HIV cases but battle not over

NEW DELHI, 15 June—Radhe Shyam looks every inch the family man as he cradles his chubby, four-month-old baby in his arms and glances lovingly at his wife and two other daughters.

Shyam, his wife and one of his three daughters, however, are HIV positive. The couple's youngest is also likely to be carrying the virus, although that will be confirmed only when she is tested once she is 18 months old.

The 42-year-old and his family are among the estimated 2.3 million people in India living with HIV. Daily life for people with the virus is hard, particularly due to the stigma it still carries in the socially conservative country.

"I was working as a cook and doing well for myself but my life changed for ever in 2008 when I was found to be HIV positive," said Shyam, who lives in the east of India's capital, New Delhi.

"I lost my job and still can't find another one because the moment people come to know about my disease, they step back. My wife is illiterate and we have three children to take care of," he told AFP, fighting back tears.—Internet

Rep Weiner gets an action figure

A Connecticut company has created an action figure of embattled US Rep Anthony Weiner, D-NY, that comes in both PG-13 and R-rated versions.

Herobuilders of Oxford said the Anthony Weiner action figure released Monday comes in a PG-13 version dressed in gym clothes with "Tweet This" printed on his shorts and an anatomically correct R-rated version "for adults only," the New York Daily News reported.

The figures join other merchandise created in the wake of Weiner's picture-sending indiscretions on Twitter, including T-shirts, mugs and bumper stickers. The department said the swarm was only the latest in a recent string of bee incidents in the city. Police said a mailbox in the Little Italy neighbourhood was swarmed about two weeks ago and a second swarm was spotted around a Washington Heights fire escape a few days later.

"What the (AFC) executive committee entrusts me to do at this particular moment is work together closer with all the members of the executive committee and the administration," Zhang said at AFC House in the Malaysian capital.

Large crowd expected for Mavs parade on Thursday

DALLAS, 15 June—Five years after a parade drawn up to celebrate the Dallas Mavericks' first NBA championship backfired, new plans are in place for a ride through the city's streets.

About 250,000 people are expected to turn out Thursday to cheer on Dirk Nowitzki, Jason Kidd, Jason Terry and the rest of the 2011 champs. Everyone will be there, from the players to the coaches, the front office to franchise founder Donald Carter, who accepted the championship trophy when the Mavs beat the Miami Heat for the title on Sunday night.

"The parade is going to be amazing," said Nowitzki, the finals MVP. "We're going to enjoy the heck out of that."

In 2006, the Mavericks won the first two games of the NBA finals and local officials were so excited that they released the route of a parade in case the team won it all. Their foe — which happened to be the Heat — used it as motivation to win the next four games.—Internet

Under-achieving Puel destined for Lyon exit

LYON, 15 June—Lyon will on Wednesday begin a process to dismiss coach Claude Puel, thereby bringing an end to three trophyless years marked by on-pitch disappointment and mounting fan discontent. Club officials will accompany Puel to a hearing of the legal affairs committee of the French Professional League (LFP), where a 'conciliation hearing' will lay the groundwork for his dismissal.

The meeting, confirmed by sources close to the club, will map out grounds for the termination of Puel's contract a

Trip to Haiti puts golf in perspective for McIlroy

"I remember driving past the presidential palace," McIlroy said, "and the dome on top is just hanging off. I was just thinking to myself, if they can't even repair the (palace), then they can't do anything. They just need so much help."

Pakistan ready to host Bangladesh World Cup qualifier

KARACHI, 15 June—Pakistani football said on Tuesday it is confident next month's home World Cup qualifier against Bangladesh will go ahead, promising tight security for the match.

After the first leg of their Asian zone qualifier for the 2014 World Cup in Dhaka on 29 June, the two sides were scheduled to meet in Lahore on 3 July.

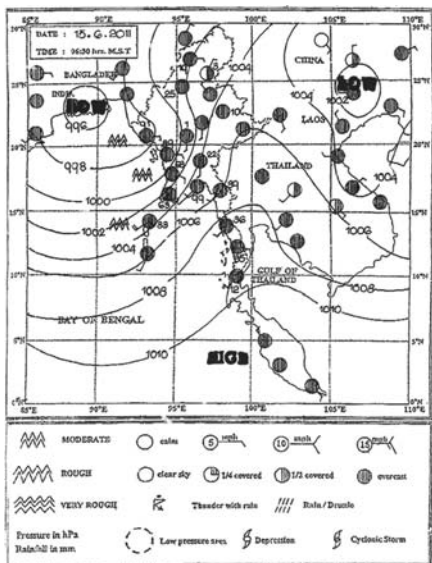

But arrangements ran into trouble after Bangladesh asked FIFA, the game's ruling body, to relocate the match due to security fears. FIFA has apparently rejected the request in a move welcomed by Pakistan Football Federation (PFF) secretary Ahmed Yar Khan Lodhi. "We hosted Palestine and Malaysia earlier this year and both the teams returned happy, so we have proper security arrangements in place and we are confident that the match will go ahead," Lodhi told AFP.—Internet

ASEAN Dengue Day, World Malaria Day marked

Union Minister for Health Dr Pe Thet Khin delivers an address at the ceremony to mark ASEAN Dengue Day and World Malaria Day (2011).—MNA

NAY PYI TAW, 15 June—Seventy-five per cent of dengue haemorrhagic fever cases around the world is in Asian and Pacific regions, and Southeast Asia makes up 52% of the dengue-prone areas in the world, and Indonesia, Thailand and Myanmar suffer dengue outbreaks most, said Union Minister for Health Dr Pe Thet Khin at the ceremony to mark ASEAN Dengue Day and World Malaria Day (2011) at the Ministry of Health here this morning.

He said that the disease causes not only social but also economic burden, so the 15th of June was designated as ASEAN Dengue Day at the 10th ASEAN Health Ministers' Meeting held in Singapore in 2010.

Previously, dengue cases were found only in urban areas, but now the disease also breaks out in rural areas and villages, he said. In 1970, the death rate of dengue patients was over six in every 100, and it decreased to about one per cent in 2010, he said, adding that in the past, the vulnerable group was under 15 and the most vulnerable were preprimary and primary schoolchildren. However, he said that dengue cases are also found often in middle and elderly people.

He added that the theme of this year's ASEAN Dengue Day is "Dengue is Everybody's Concern, Causing Socioeconomic Burden, But It's Preventable". About 50 million people around the world suffer malaria, and about one million of them die yearly, and in Southeast Asia about 5000 people pick up the disease and about 100,000 die of malaria a year, he said.

The malaria outbreak rate in 1990 has been halved by 2015, but all should not be complacent about the achievement of the UN Millennium Goal, he said.

Dengue preventive and control measures are being carried out with the aids of WHO, UNICEF, 3 Diseases Fund, Global Fund and JICA in schools and wards, he said, calling on the people to take preventive measures against dengue.

After the ceremony the Union minister and guests visited the commemorative pavilion.—MNA
