More funds tipped for health and education

THE Union Government is likely to increase social spending in its proposed budget for the 2013-14 financial year, experts and members of parliament said last week.

More income from foreign investment and international aid will give the government greater flexibility in spending, they said, and reduce the need to print money to cover the deficit, which is a major source of inflation.

U Thurein Zaw, chairman of the Pyithu Hluttaw Public Accounts Committee, said the government will prioritise health, education and rural development projects in the coming fiscal year, which begins on April 1. Defence expenditure should also be reduced, he said.

The 2012-13 budget saw an increase in health spending to 3 percent of the total budget, or K367 billion, up from 1.1pc. Education rose to 4.91pc, or K617 billion, from 4.13pc the previous year, according to official figures.

"Health and education expenditure basically doubled [last year] but the country is still developing so we have some limitations. As well as longer-term income-generation plans, we need to prioritise sectors that can provide high income in the short term to finance more expenditure, such as mining, manufacturing and transportation," he said.

"We expect to increase the [health and education sectors] so they match other countries but it can't happen immediately," he added.

The budget will be submitted to the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw during its sixth session, which begins this week in Nay Pyi Taw.

Ahead of the start of the session, the government's Myanmar Financial Commission met last week to finalise its proposed budget. Addressing a meeting on December 31, President U Thein Sein, the chairman of the commission, said there would be "incremental changes" in budget sharing between the national and regional governments.

The state-run New Light of Myanmar reported that coordination meetings were taking place between "the Union Government led by vice presidents and region/state chief

Kachin air strikes are 'self-defence', says govt

YANGON – The government said on January 4 that airstrikes targeting Kachin Independence Army soldiers in Kachin State were launched in self-defence, vowing "maximum restraint" in the face of growing international concern.

Fighting between the Tatmadaw and the KIA in the far north of the country has worsened in recent days.

In a statement, the government accused the KIA of blowing up railway tracks, roads and bridges, ambushing military columns and threatening local people.

"Due to these circumstances, the Tatmadaw had to take military action as self defence and in order to protect the safety of lives and properties of the people, safe and smooth transportation and peace and tranquillity of the region," the statement said.

"Even though [the] Tatmadaw had to take this action, it has exercised with maximum restraint in using force," it added.

Tens of thousands of people have been displaced in Kachin State since June 2011, when a 17-year ceasefire between the government and the KIA broke down, prompting months of fierce fighting with gun and artillery fire.

The United States said on January 2 it was "deeply troubled" by the recent use of air raids, while UN chief Ban Ki-moon urged Myanmar "to desist from any action that could endanger the lives of civilians living in the area or further intensify the conflict in the region".

The Kachin clashes, along with communal unrest in the western state of Rakhine, have overshadowed dramatic political changes since Myanmar's widely praised emergence from decades of army rule in early 2011.

Myanmar has reached tentative ceasefires with most of the other major ethnic rebel groups, but several rounds of talks with the Kachin have shown little tangible progress. The Kachin accuse the government of pushing dialogue only on the basis of a ceasefire and troop withdrawals, neglecting to address longstanding demands for greater political rights and complaints about Chinese-led construction of dams and other projects in the resource-rich region. – AFP

Thailand's Abhisit: Dead in the water

ASIAN FOCUS

with Roger Milton

NO one will be more glad to see the back of 2012 than Abhisit Vejjajiva, the former Thai prime minister and current leader of the opposition.

In November, a committee appointed by the defence minister declared that the former PM had forged documents to avoid military conscription.

As a result, the government is seeking to strip him of the rank he was given when teaching at an army academy and wants to make him to repay his salary.

Worse followed at the start of last month when Abhisit was charged with murder over the death of a taxi driver shot by troops during the Red Shirt protests in Bangkok in May 2010.

Abhisit was prime minister at that time and he authorised the military to use lethal force, if necessary, to disperse the demonstrators.

More than 90 people were killed, and after a lengthy investigation, Abhisit and his former deputy, Suthep Thaugsuban, have been charged with "giving orders that led to the deaths of others with intent".

In addition, the ruling Pheu Thai government has asked the Department of Special Investigation to check into alleged irregularities in the sale of rice when Abhisit was PM.

It appears that some officials, with or without his knowledge, may have violated the law against price collusion in the sale of rice and that this led to unfair competition in the bidding process.

Abhisit and Suthep also face allegations that they broke Thailand's Political Party Act when they made flood compensation donations during their term in office.

As if all this were not enough, Abhisit's Democrat Party is in disarray over who to choose as its candidate for the coming gubernatorial election in Bangkok.

The current city governor, Sukhumbhand Paribatra, is a Democrat and is keen to run again for a second term, but Abhisit and other party leaders regard him as far too wishy-washy and want to replace him.

They have sounded out the party's No 2, Korn Chatikavanij, but he has spurned the call because his goal is to take over the top slot and hopefully become the next PM.

With that in mind, he has no wish to be sidelined in the governor's residence for the next four years, because he's pretty sure that Abhisit will be gone by then.

A lot of others think so too. Not because of the murder charge, but because Abhisit's performance as opposition leader has been woeful.

A recent survey revealed that 18 months after being defeated in the 2010 general election, Abhisit's approval rating has sunk to 16 percent, while Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra is up at 52pc.

The guy is dead in the water. That was evident last month when he was interviewed about the murder rap by the BBC's mild-mannered Mishal Husain.

Smiling boyishly, he began by saying everyone knew what had happened during the protests and knew that the charges against him were very far-fetched.

Mishal promptly retorted: "Why are they far-fetched? You were the person in power, you must have authorised the use of force in tearing down the protest camp."

Immediately, Abhisit looked rattled. And after admitting that he had indeed approved the use of live ammunition, he squirmed this way and that when she asked him if he regretted the decision.

All he would concede was that he was sorry that people had unfortunately died.

It was a cringing display, but that said, Abhisit is not going to be jailed, let alone executed, for the murder charge, because he is just too tight with the Thai establishment.

He will, however, be tied up fighting the charge and rebutting the other allegations, so his already tepid performance is likely to get even worse.

And if the Democrats do lose the Bangkok governorship on February 17, he will almost certainly be replaced by Korn soon afterwards.

The Mail Box

Dear editor,
For citizens, opposition groups and the Myanmar government, achieving peace will be vital for the success of the democratisation process in Myanmar. Many people from a range of sectors are committed to seeing ceasefires signed and turned into long-term peace agreements. They have shown their support for the peace process through a range of activities, from demonstrating to facilitating negotiations.

In terms of the Kachin conflict, one thing that needs to be considered is the importance of putting pressure on both sides to reach an agreement. It is as important as compromise and negotiation. Individuals and groups both inside and outside Myanmar need to pressure both the military and Kachin Independence Army to stop fighting. In this regard, the media, which increasingly has the power to shape opinions and perceptions, should focus on the conflict and ensure that equal pressure is placed on both sides to ensure peace is reached.

Regards,
Nan Khaing Sandar Lwin

Fighting rages in Kachin State

By Cherry Thein

FIGHTING around key Kachin Independence Army positions near its Laiza headquarters continued last week, sources in the area reported, despite appeals from the United Nations and United States for restraint.

Residents in areas close to the conflict said that while Tatmadaw aircraft were regularly spotted on January 3 and 4 it was unclear whether they were hitting KIA positions as they did in late December.

On January 1, state media reported that the Tatmadaw had taken a key base from the KIA using airstrikes, prompting an international outcry.

"We're obviously deeply troubled by the increased violence," US State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland said in Washington late on December 2.

"We are continuing to urge the government of Burma and the Kachin Independence Organisation to cease this conflict, to get to a real dialogue to address grievances as the government of Burma has been able to do in virtually all of the other conflict areas," Ms Nuland added.

Father Aung Dang from Bhamo township told The Myanmar Times on December 4 that fighting between the Tatmadaw and KIA has resulted in many deaths on both sides.

"The situation became more serious from last night (December 3). There were aircraft over Bhamo this morning. Myitkyina is currently safe but fighting affected Bhamo, Mansi, Daw Hpung Yang, Loiye, upper Laiza and Pangwa," he said. "The death toll increased from both sides but we are not sure about civilians."

A KIO official also confirmed that there had been fighting in the Laiza area on December 4. Colonel James Lum Dau, a KIO deputy foreign affairs official, told news agency AFP earlier last week that the situation had been tense since the end of December. Serious fighting was occurring within 11 kilometres of Laiza on the China border, he said.

Despite reports of the KIO offering a temporary ceasefire during the Christmas period, severe fighting broke out during the final week of December, after the KIA refused to vacate an important supply route. The government has accused the KIA of ambushing its convoys on the Myitkyina-Bhamo Highway.

"The government army assaulted Bhawn Yae and KIA camp No 23. There are three main places for fighting. On December 28, three aircraft dropped bombs on Mone Laing along the Myitkyina-Bhamo road," said one resident in the area,

Former KIO official issues peace plea

KACHIN political Dr Tu Jar has warned the continued fighting can become a "black mark" on the image of the government and called for U Thein Sein's administration to return to the negotiating table as soon as possible.

In a statement released on January 1, Dr Tu Jar, a former vice chairman of the Kachin Independence Organisation (KIO), said the conflict brought "no benefits" for the country and its people, and the government risked alienating supporters both at home and abroad.

"As a person from Kachin State, I'd like to call for the government to substitute negotiation for fighting and please stop offensives as soon as possible," he said.

"The fighting in Kachin State can make a black mark against the image of the new government and can hamper its reforms at a time when local and foreign support for its efforts towards democracy and peace building is increasing."

He said the Kachin had fought on the frontlines with the Tatmadaw and "helped to save the union" when many ethnic armies rebelled against the central government in 1949. It had signed a ceasefire in 1994, participated in the National Convention and supported the 2010 election.

"The government should instantly end its fighting using a large numbers of troops not only attacking on land but also by air against the KIO and instead consider [the KIO's] contribution for the benefits of the country and the suffering of the people in the battle area," he said, adding that said 100,000 displaced people were "hostage" to the fighting and urgently needed more assistance.

Dr Tu Jar resigned from the KIO to form the Kachin State Progressive Party and contest the 2010 elections. However, the Union Election Commission did not allow the party to register because of its links to the KIO, which refused government demands to become a Border Guard Force under the Tatmadaw. — Thomas Kean who asked not to be named.

"There was also fighting in La Ja Yan. Some resident's houses were damaged," he said.

anywhere safe to go. They just stay there in fear," Father Aung Dang said, adding that it was not clear if there had been any casualties in the camps.

He said the decision to attack the majority-Christian Kachin during the Christmas period would create stronger anti-government sentiment. "I don't want to say anything about [either side's

'Peace discussions are useless unless both sides trust each other and that won't happen while there is still conflict.'

It said the Tatmadaw had not started the attacks and was only acting in self-defence.

Observers expressed concern for residents of camps for internally displaced persons (IDPs) that are located near the centre of the fighting.

"The fighting is very close to the IDP camps but people don't have Reverend Saboi Jum told The Myanmar Times on January 4 said he was concerned for civilians, particularly IDPs, in KIO-controlled areas.

"There is serious fighting between Laiza and Pangwa where there are some IDP camps. At a KIA meeting on December 17, they said they were worried about a government actions] but I am just feeling so unhappy about the situation and pray to end the conflict," said Rev Saboi Jum, who is also chairman of the non-government organisation Shalom Foundation.

Beijing raps government as conflict spills over into China

BEIJING – China has made a diplomatic complaint to Myanmar after three bombs landed on its territory during air attacks on Kachin Independence Army troops in Kachin State, just over their shared border, Beijing said last week.

"The Chinese side has launched representations with the Myanmar side requiring them to take effective and immediate measures to avoid the repetition of similar incidents," foreign ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying said on January 4.

The bombs landed just inside China on the evening of December 30 and caused no casualties, she told reporters at a regular media briefing.

Ms Hua refused to be drawn on whether China would mediate between the two sides in an effort to end a conflict which has overshadowed wider political reforms in the country.

"The issue concerning northern Myanmar is Myanmar's internal affair and we hope that the Myanmar government can appropriately deal with the issue through peaceful negotiation," the spokeswoman said. — AFP the latest flare-up in fighting.

However, he said the use of aircraft had changed the context of the conflict, adding that there was no place in a democratic country for such kind of fighting.

"The government and KIA have been fighting for years but it is not the answer," he said. "We get nothing from fighting but deaths on both sides. There should be a ceasefire first and then political dialogue."

"Peace discussions are useless unless both sides can trust each other and that won't happen while there is still conflict."

"We need a spirit of brotherhood, patience and loving kindness to build trust towards peace discussions. For both sides to come together for political dialogue with the intention of creating genuine peace, they will need to shake off their old attitudes and personal grudges," he said.

An Air Bagan Fokker-100 after it crashed near Heho Airport in southern Shan State on December 25. Pic: AFP/Myawaddy

Air crash investigation team looks to Australia for answers

By Zaw Win Than

AN INVESTIGATION into the fatal Air Bagan crash at Heho on Christmas Day could take longer than expected because experts in Singapore say they are unable to recover data from the plane's black box data recorder.

Instead, the device could be sent to Australia for analysis, said U Win Swe Tun, a deputy director general at the Department of Civil Aviation and head of a four-member team tasked with investigating the crash.

The team was established on December 26 to find out the cause of the crash, which resulted in two deaths and 11 people sustaining injuries.

U Win Swe Tun said the plane's flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder had been found but were in poor condition, making recovery of data difficult.

"Initially we planned to send the black box to Singapore to find the result but the team from Singapore said it was not possible ... because the aircraft had been burned. So we are looking at using a team from Australia. We will send the black box to Australia and we will find the cause of the crash," U Win Swe Tun told The Myanmar Times last week.

He said Air Bagan was cooperating and supporting the investigation process. Air Bagan declined to comment on the investigation when contacted last week.

The Fokker-100 was carrying 71 people when it crashed and caught fire while attempting to land at Heho in southern Shan State at 8:51am on December 25 after taking off from Mandalay Airport.

A tour guide on the plane, Ma Nwe Lin Shein, died in the crash along with a motorcyclist, U Pyar, who was killed when the plane crashed into a road near Heho Airport.

The 11 people injured in the crash included four foreigners, the two pilots and a cyclist.

At a press conference at Yangon's Kandawgyi Palace Hotel on December 26, Air Bagan said the airline was fully insured for the crash.

The airline also said that it acquired the Fokker-100, which had been in operation since 1991, from British Midlands International Company in August 2005.

Air Bagan was formed in June 2004 and launched its first flights in November that year. It is a subsidiary of Htoo Group of Companies, owned by U Tay Za.

health and ministers on budget allocation ... in accord with the constitution".

Increased funding for regional governments "is required for ensuring harmonious development of the entire nation ... thereby contributing towards better living standards and increased per capita income", it said.

The report also quoted the president as saying that officials needed to ensure that unprofitable state-owned enterprises become "free from reliance on the state budget" and he called for "more effective public financial management".

While MPs will debate spending for 2013-14 during the sixth session, they will also examine the 2012-2013 budget closely to see whether allocated funds have been spent effectively, said Union Solidarity and Development Party (USDP) Pyithu Hluttaw representative U Win Than.

"We will get next year's budget plan in the upcoming parliament session and we will also get the expenses for this year. We have to examine concerning areas and departments but not only on paper; we will also check the real situation through various means," he said.

"I think the government will change the upcoming budget to reflect the concerns of MPs in previous parliament sessions. I expect health and education expenditure will rise considerably," he said.

Despite a salary increase for some civil servants, the budget deficit declined in 2012-13 to K1.954 billion from about K2.159 billion because of reduced budgets for uneconomical state enterprises and a privatisation drive, according to official figures.

The budget deficit is about 4.2pc of gross domestic product this year. Both ministers and parliamentarians indicated they would try to keep the deficit under 5pc in 2013-14, with Minister for National Planning and Economic Development Dr Kan Zaw saying at a workshop for MPs in November that budget deficits were sometimes necessary to spur economic development and growth.

U Thurein Zaw echoed this sentiment.

"Developing countries cannot evade budget deficits because we have to invest in infrastructure," he said, adding that Myanmar could also expect some support from developed countries and financial institutions for these projects.

"We shouldn't always be anxious about a budget deficit. The size of the deficit is the important thing, and [a deficit] can also have a [weakening] effect on the exchange rate, which would be useful for end users and farmers," U Win Than said.

Shan Nationalities Democratic Party member and Pyithu Hluttaw representative for Hsipaw U Ye Htun said high defence spending was less essential because the government could solve problems, such as the Kachin conflict, Rakhine State violence and Letpadaung mine protests, through negotiation and dialogue rather than military means.

He said health and education spending should become comparable to other countries in region. In 2010, ASEAN countries allocated from 16.7pc, in the Philippines, to 32.9pc, in Malaysia, of their budget to these sectors, Asian Development Bank figures show. The data set did not include figures for Laos, Vietnam, Indonesia or Myanmar.

"Budget contribution for some areas is much lower than it should be. We talked about that in the previous parliament sessions. Another thing is we need to reduce corruption but increase fees for some government services," he said, giving the example of a National Registration Card, which officially costs just K6 to issue.

"We also have to check government facts and figures, such as how much paddy is grown, timber exported or beans and pulses produced. We have to find out the actual figure" to accurately calculate GDP and the deficit-to-GDP ratio, he said.

Publish and be damned?

IN DEPTH

with
Kyaw Hsu Mon & Nan Tin Hlwe

THE announcement was hailed around the world as a further sign of reform: Myanmar would again allow privately owned daily newspapers from April 1.

In the media industry, where companies and journalists have lobbied hard for the right to publish daily rather than weekly, the news was greeted with a mixture of relief and trepidation, as the reality of compiling, printing and distributing a newspaper every 24 hours sunk in.

Even the editor-in-chief of one of the nation's highest-circulation publications, U Thaung Su Nyein of 7Day News Journal, was unsure whether his team would be ready by April. He admits he was surprised that the announcement came so soon.

"Daily takes a lot of work – finance, human resources, machinery, more procedures and also responsibilities. We will try our best to be able confident his organisation would make the transition successfully.

"We have known for some time that [the announcement] was just around the corner and have commenced our planning," he said.

"I'm confident that we have enough time to prepare ourselves. ... This is going to be a tremendously exciting period for our organisation and we will pursue our goal. We've waited for this for a long time."

While reports have suggested there could soon be eight to 10 daily newspapers, Mr Dunkley said there was "not room for 10 players or even half of that number".

"I predict at the end of year one there will be no more than three left in the game," he said. "I'd say don't be in this game if you can't afford to spend US$2 million or more. It wouldn't be hard to drop $5 million before you saw some light."

For journals lacking human or financial resources to go daily alone, there is the option of combining with like-minded publishers or focusing on smaller geographic areas, such as a single city or state and region. Dr Myo Min Htike, the owner of Venus News Journal, said he had already begun discussions with "some friends who share the same spirit and eagerness to publish daily".

"We might combine to be a big publication but are still just discussing it at the moment," he said. "The main challenges are capital, the staff capacity, printing and distribution."

Even if his publication remains a weekly, he said he has plans to reform its contents to remain competitive in the daily environment.

"When daily private newspapers come out, I will definitely change our style. At the moment we focus mostly just on news."

Exile media organisations face the challenge of gaining a foothold against well-established players in an industry that is about to undergo its biggest upheaval since private publishers returned after 1988.

Ye Ni, the editor of the Myanmar edition of The

A vendor sells journals on the streets of Yangon in January 2012. Pic: Yadanar Irrawaddy Magazine, agreed that the media companies with the best access to capital and well established distribution networks would have the initial advantage in the daily era. But he also said there would be opportunities for smaller players provided they are willing to work together.

"Some media businessmen are publishing different types of journals: for example, pop, sport, international news, business and local news. They might combine all journals into a daily newspaper," he said.

"The biggest challenge will be managing with the pressure and stress of publishing a daily newspaper on time. Now they are only facing a weekly deadline."

Some organisations say they believe they are ready to make the transition. Indeed, a number have been preparing for months in anticipation of the December 28 announcement.

But all agreed that distributing a newspaper across the country each day would be almost impossible with the current distribution systems, particularly when almost all staff are confined to offices in Yangon and Mandalay.

"I can say editorial staff in our newsroom are ready but the thing that we all will face is lack of infrastructure. We will definitely face the problem for distribution," said U Kyaw Min Swe, editor-in-chief of The Voice Weekly.

"The transportation system needs to be upgraded to make it possible. The second thing is we have to have branches in every township, like the state newspapers already have. And the internet connection is still quite slow if we try to distribute it electronically," he said.

The Voice is considering publishing as an evening newspaper or focusing only on a few cities to make it possible to get copies out to readers in time, he said.

"For example, like the City newspaper [published by Yangon City Development Committee] that only focuses on Yangon city areas. This kind of evening newspaper is small circulation and it does not need to reach other cities. But if people in some other cities want to read it, it can get to them by the next day," he said.

Competing with the much-maligned state press may be more difficult than many anticipate.

"We cannot compete on price with the state-run newspapers (K50 a day) because the government is subsidising all three," U Kyaw Min Swe said.

"Then there's the quality of the print paper: Readers in Myanmar aren't used to newsprint and recycled paper, which are suitable for a daily newspaper. Most local journals are using wood-free print paper, which is more expensive.

"We have to introduce [readers] to the style of international standard newspaper style. Myanmar Times is already with newsprint for readers ... The Voice is also using Burma print paper and we only use wood-free for advertisements."

"I can say editorial staff in the newsroom are ready but the thing that we all will face is the problem for distribution."

Another challenge will be improving cooperation between the media industry and other stakeholders, particularly government officials, to avoid problems such as court cases, said U Thaung Su Nyein.

"Both [the media industry and government] are weak in cooperation. Both sides need to change," he said.

But he said he believed that daily newspaper would help to drive forward Myanmar's transition to democracy. "Everyone hopes to see a transparent and fair election in 2015, and a government and huttaws that represent people," he said. "I think this [announcement] is a good thing as daily newspapers can help shape the current government into the government that people want."

Mr Dunkley said the decision to allow daily newspapers showed that U Aung Kyi was "the right man" for the job of information minister. "I find the new minister to be a breath of fresh air. [He] has gone about resuscitating a moribund ministry with the right attitude."

The Ministry of Information announced on December 28 that it would allow eligible individuals and organisations to publish private daily newspapers from April 1, not only in Myanmar but also foreign and minority languages.

There are a number of criteria that could prove troublesome for publishers, particularly that applicants "must submit community standard including purpose of publication, targeted readers, newspaper types, organisational set-up, code of ethics, code of conduct, code of practices, both in Myanmar and English languages".

NLD assembly rescheduled for Feb

By Kyaw Hsu Mon

THE National League for Democracy will hold its first national assembly in the first week of February, a spokesperson said last week, more than a month later than originally expected.

Township-level assemblies will soon be completed to select delegates for district, regional and finally national assemblies, central executive committee member U Nyan Win said on January 2.

"Except in Kachin State, almost all townships around the whole nation are holding their assemblies now," he said. "There are many townships so this step takes quite a while to organise but the other levels will be quite straightforward. We expect they will take only a short time and then the nationwide assembly will start in the first week of February," he said.

It is not clear how long the national assembly will run for but one of the main tasks will be updating and clarifying the party's policies.

He said the assemblies were cancelled in some areas of Kachin State because of the fighting between the Tatmadaw and Kachin Independence Army.

However, the selection process has been controversial, with some grassroots members unhappy at the central committee selecting members to organise the township assemblies.

The most significant disputes occurred in Ayeyarwady, Magwe and Mandalay regions. In Labutta township, more than 100 members, including a victorious NLD representative from the 1990 election, resigned in October because they were unhappy at what they called the "undemocratic" nature of the assemblies.

U Nyan Win acknowledged the assemblies had been controversial but said no members had resigned since the Labutta group.

"[The disputes] happened because the NLD is open to all comers so there are many voices in the party. We're trying to solve those kinds of problems as much as we can," he said.

While the NLD was established in 1988, it has never been able to hold a national assembly because its leaders spent much of the past two decades under house arrest.

Pyigyitagun party meeting delayed over ward disputes

By Phyto Wai Kyaw

THE National League for Democracy has been forced to delay a township assembly to select representatives for its upcoming national conference because of internal conflict, members said last week.

Seven members elected in ward assemblies in Mandalay Region's Pyigyitagun township were temporarily suspended by the head office on December 28 for allegedly intimidating other members.

However, after meeting with the suspended members in Yangon last week, party patron U Tin Oo agreed to postpone the township assembly in Pyigyitagun until the complaints could be properly investigated, said U Ko Ko Aung, who took part in the meeting.

U Win Hlaing, U Zaw Win, Daw Mee Mee, U Myint Ko, U Saw Win and U Kyaw Kyaw Naing were suspended along with U Ko Ko Aung. Another member, U Aung Ngwe, was also suspended.

"We did not bully or threaten anyone at the ward assembly," said U Ko Ko Aung. "When the assembly was held we all got over 90 percent of the votes from party members and were selected as representatives. The opposing group knew that there would be no place for them in the assembly and so created this issue."

In a letter dated December 28, the party's headquarters informed the members of their suspension, which was to remain in force until the national assembly is completed. The letter said they had threatened other members at the ward assembly.

Most of those suspended have been vocal critics of the way the assemblies have been organised, describing them as undemocratic and unfair.

The issue has sparked a significant amount of debate among NLD members over the fairness of the assemblies, U Ko Ko Aung said.

"Officials from the headquarters assembly commission did not investigate the allegations, they just handled it one-sidedly. We were selected by the party members and so the one-sided decision has made other members upset. This could ruin their belief and trust in the party," he said.

Ward assemblies began in Pyigyitagun township in the last week of November, with about 65 representatives chosen for the township assembly. By late December assemblies had been held in 14 of the 16 wards, with the assembly in Kha Kway ward cancelled because of a dispute between members and the Ka ward assembly cancelled because of a lack of members.

Scheduled for December 22, the Kha Kway ward assembly was cancelled before it began after a district assembly commission official banned those without membership cards from participating, members said.

"Over 30 party members attended the assembly on that day and all are listed as our party members. The party officials should be happy that so many party members came. However, the secretary of the district assembly, U Kan, stopped those without member cards from taking part and then the rest were confused so they left. We tried so hard for our ward assembly but it was ruined. We don't know how we should continue," NLD Youth member Ko Zaw Min from Kha Kway ward said on December 31.

He said party members and the in-charge of ward assemblies sent two separate letters on December 22 to the headquarters assembly commission to take action against U Kan.

Several NLD members in the township involved in the assembly process said members without cards were allowed to take part.

"Party members in most wards haven't got member cards. In other cases the ward assemblies were held just by using the member lists," said U Win Nyein, chairman of Htein Kone ward assembly commission.

U Zaw Win, the head of the NLD office in Pyigyitagun's Zagwe ward assembly, said there were also problems at his ward's vote on December 19 because the chairman of Mandalay Region assembly commission interfered with the selection process.

"Most party members in our ward are entrepreneurs. They are so enthusiastic to support the party but most of them don't have time to take on positions of responsibility. So all members united and agreed to appoint ward representatives rather than vote for them. But then the chair of Mandalay Region assembly commission came and told us we had to select them by voting. There were about 290 members here and they were unhappy about that interference. I talked to the chair and explained that there was no competition for the assembly spots and we managed to complete the assembly," he said.

Brides to China top govt human trafficking list

By Soe Sandar Oo

ABOUT 80 percent of human trafficking cases in Myanmar over the past five years involved women being smuggled into China for forced marriage, a Myanmar Police Force official said last week.

Of the remaining 20pc of cases, 10pc involved Thailand and 6pc Malaysia, the spokesperson from the Department of Transnational Crime said.

"Myanmar women are in great demand because China practises its one-child policy. About 80pc of human trafficking in Myanmar are due to forced illegal marriage issue in China," he said.

"Solving this problem will not only require the effort of the police force. It is partly related to poverty and also we need to improve education, particularly in the border areas."

Between January 2006 and August 2011, 731 trafficking cases were reported, 585 of which involved China.

Of those cases, 1305 people were rescued, including 780 from China – or about 60pc of the total – along with 483 from Thailand, 16 from Indonesia and 15 from Malaysia.

Meanwhile, 85pc of victims were women and 65pc of traffickers were also women, the figures show.

The spokesperson said it remained difficult to rescue women who had been trafficked into China because they were spread across the country and they needed more cooperation from the Chinese authorities.

The Ministry of Home Affairs released the data in December at the launch of its latest five-year national plan of action to combat human trafficking, which covers the period between 2012 and 2016.

Women trafficked into other neighbouring countries are often forced to become sex workers, the official said. Men are likely to end up as labourers, he said, while children are trafficked to make money as beggars.

Most women are lured to China by the promise of a well-paying job.

Ma Moe Moe, 23, was sold to a Chinese man in Guangdong Province but escaped after three days in October 2012.

She was passed between four brokers before reaching Guangdong, she said, adding that she met many Myanmar forced brides while in China.

"I ran and escaped from the Chinese man who bought me from a broker to be his wife when he went to the toilet one day. They consider you to be a wife if you give birth to a son but will kill a female child and they'll make you a forced labourer in the fields," said the Shwe Pyi Thar township resident. "You will become a slave until you give birth to a son. I saw many Myanmar girls who are aged 20 to 25."

"I even found some who had been tortured. I was given a medical examination by a broker in China mostly to make sure I can give birth. All brokers are women."

She said her personal experience was almost exactly the same as that portrayed on a half-hour film the government has been transmitting on TV since 1997 to improve awareness of human trafficking.

She said that while most people knew the risks they agree to go to China because they have no other way to earn money. She had been tricked by the offer of a K200,000-a-month job.

A retired general of the Department of Transnational Crime said that while a large number of women have been rescued from trafficking, support programs after they return are weak.

He said it takes the Department of Social Welfare from one to three years to visit women rescued from human trafficking.

"I was not satisfied with the resettlement system because we cannot help them visibly," he said.

He said many suffer from psychological problems after being rescued.

"We have to try to improve their lives so they don't try and go to China but especially look after them better after they are rescued," he said.

Taxis available in instalments

By Hlaing Kyaw Soe

A COMPANY plans to sell taxis in Mandalay Region through instalment plans.

Auto Taxi Sales and Service Centre deputy manager Ko Hla Kyaw Swar said three models would be available under the program, including Toyota Belta sedans and Nissan AD vans.

Customers will be required to pay in three instalments: one-off payments of K3 million and K3.5 million, followed by a daily payment of K12,000. They will have to pay K16 million to K17 million for the cars, which have a market value about K12 million to K14 million.

He said the hire-purchase program would make cars more affordable and improve transportation in Mandalay Region.

"Mandalay is a hub for travellers; from there they can go to Pyin Oo Lwin, Muse and Lashio, or Sagaing and Monywa.

We also aim to help people own a car more easily," Ko Hla Kyaw Swar said.

The company has already sold more than 100 cars on instalments in Yangon and is flexible in how the repayments are made, he said. It will also arrange registration for the taxis, which will have an "AA" licence plate prefix.

"Instead of paying each day, you can arrange to make payments once a week or month."

Art fundraiser for disaster victims held

By Si Thu Lwin

NINETY-FIVE artists from Mandalay took part in an exhibition to raise funds for earthquake victims last month.

The Mandalay Yenanthit 2 show was held from December 25 to 29 at Dhamma Tharla Hall in Chan Aye Thar Zan township and showcased 290 works, ranging in price from K30,000 to K1.2 million.

Most artists displayed two paintings larger than 4 feet by 3 feet and three paintings of smaller dimensions.

"Some artists donated the entire value of paintings and others donated 30pc. We are going to donate all the money we received to earthquake-stricken areas," said U Myint Tun (Mandalay), who helped to organise the show.

Artist U Khin Maung Myint said the show was an opportunity to see the range of artwork being produced in Mandalay.

"I take pride in our artists from Mandalay. There are a lot of artists and normally it is not easy to see them all together like this," he said at the opening on December 25.

In January, 2012, 10 artists organised the first Mandalay Yenanthit show at Thiriwitsa Art Gallery. – Translated by Thit Lwin

SNLD leader dismisses Shan rivals' criticism

By Zaw Myint

THE head of the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy has hit back against leaders of a rival Shan party, rejecting allegations his group was responsible for two parties emerging in the state.

SNLD chairman U Khun Htun Oo dismissed the comments from Shan Nationalities Democratic Party vice chairman U Sai Hsaung Hsi as “merely one-sided speculation” and said his rivals had “done nothing” for the cause of democracy.

“Nobody but the people can decide whether we are the culprit. Our fellow political parties can also decide. They will judge. He has no right to say that,” U Khun Htun Oo said.

“We have done much. We have gone to jail because of our beliefs. [SNLD leaders] haven’t been [to jail] because they have done nothing ... I have no stains at all economically,” he said.

“It is a one-sided comment without any proof. They shouldn’t have said that. Why will we be seen as responsible for the split when their main concern is making money?”

The SNLD won 23 seats in the 1990 election but was deregistered after boycotting the vote in 2010. Former members who wanted to contest the poll formed the SNLD and won the third-largest number of seats, behind the Union Solidarity and Development Party and National Unity Party.

On January 13, 2012 U Khun Htun Oo was freed in an amnesty and the SNLD was reregistered in the middle of the year. He had been serving a sentence of more than 90 years imposed for high treason in 2005 after he refused to take part in the National Convention that drafted the 2008 constitution.

“We didn’t accept the 2008 constitution, we walked out. For that very reason, we were banned. We came to realise that the constitution didn’t guarantee anything for ethnic minorities. It’s the reason that we walked out. For this reason, I got a jail term after being charged with numerous wrongful acts,” he said.

U Khun Htun Oo also dismissed U Sai Hsaung Hsi’s criticism of comments he made while in the United States in September 2012 to receive an award from the National Endowment for Democracy, when he said the two parties could not merge because the SNLD’s policy was “soft”.

“This is his personal opinion. They seem to want to merge with us. For merging parties, we have formulated our own policy. It’s not like companies merging to pool their money. We have our own policies, rules and objectives since we founded party. ... It is not true that we don’t want to merge as they said. We didn’t merge because of the current situation.

“We don’t want to get our reputation stained because our journey ahead is full of obstacles. We are working for our beliefs, not our self-interest. Our primary aim is to build a union of genuine federalism for the people.

“If we continue to let this constitution remain in force, genuine federalism coveted by all nationals is impossible. There are also 25 percent [military personnel in parliament]. And lots of restrictions. We have to amend the constitution.

“If we didn’t have such a firm principle, we would have fallen into the same status as some parties. We have no parliamentarians for now. However, because of our stance, we were given an NED award. President Obama only invited the Shan party and Karen party. If we didn’t have firm principles, we wouldn’t have been recognised in this way.”

U Khun Htun Oo said he also refused to consider a merger with the SNLD because one of their members testified against him during his trial.

“I said that under the circumstances, we couldn’t merge. Merging with them is a long way off. Given the political landscape, we have no idea what will happen in 2015. And the constitution must be amended prior to 2015.

“Moreover, they put their much effort into economic activities. Your political reputation can be harmed very much if something goes wrong.”

White Tigers call for ‘genuine’ federalism

Shan Nationalities Democratic Party release six-point manifesto following January 2-3 conference in Tachileik

By Soe Than Lynn

THE Shan Nationalities Democratic Party has called for an immediate ceasefire in Kachin State and a federal system and will oppose proportional representation voting in the 2015 election.

The party released a six-point manifesto following its January 2-3 party conference in Tachileik, eastern Shan State, which was attended by about 700 members from 52 townships.

Other points include a pledge to push the Union Government and other groups to work towards “perpetual internal peace for future generations to inherit”, to work with all parties to introduced laws that “safeguard the rights of ethnic minorities” and to work for the emergence of a united Shan political front in Shan State.

The conference was the party’s second, after a similar gathering was held in Taunggyi in December 2010, and saw party leaders selected for northern, southern and eastern regions of Shan State and five central executive committee members added.

SNLD chairman and Shan State Hluttaw representative U Sai Aik Paung told The Myanmar Times the convention was “100-percent successful”, with turnout almost three times higher than expected.

“We invited five people each from 52 townships, including some far-flung towns like Putao, but more than 700 arrived and attended. People have more confidence in our party. Membership was only about [federalism]. Because we have actually done what we promised since the election, we have stronger influence among the people and have won more support,” he said.

U Sai Aik Paung said the party expects to win 80 percent of seats in townships were Shan people comprise the majority of the population in 2015, despite likely facing extra competition from the National League for Democracy providing capacity building for young party members in each township,” U Sai Aik Paung said. “We are confident of victory in 2015.”

The conference was scheduled to finish on January 4 but ended a day early because party leaders were invited to an Independence Day ceremony and dinner in Nay Pyi Taw. It was preceded by a one-day meeting of around 200 senior election,” he said. “In terms of the election, we came up with 22 points to focus on.

“The most important is for party members and especially hluttaw representatives to keep in touch closely with citizens so they are able to solve their difficulties,” he said.

Meanwhile, U Sai Aik Paung confirmed the SNLD, or White Tiger Party, was still open to the possibility of a merger with U Khun Htun Oo’s SNLD.

“Our side have left the door open for that. We never said that we couldn’t merge,” he said. “U Khun Htun Oo said the policy of our White Tiger Party was soft and the party was doing business so he couldn’t combine with us. We are doing business to raise funds for the party. If we do not have funding, we may have to ask for donations from the owners of businesses and then we will be stuck in their pocket and won’t be able to make policies freely. Honestly, the reason we are doing business is so the party can be independent; we don’t want to be in the pocket of the cronies.”

30,000 last year but this year it has increased to almost 200,000,” he said.

“We have discussed our policies and plans for winning seats in the 2015 election. Since our party’s inception, its policies have been to secure genuine federalism and equality,” he said. “We contested the election with a view to working for the good of people as much as the situation permitted instead of just saying ‘no’ to the 2008 constitution because it lacked (NLD) and Shan Nationalities League for Democracy (SNLD).

The party had been buoyed by its narrow by-election victory over the NLD and Union Solidarity and Development Party in Lashio, an area with a diverse ethnic mix.

He said that the hard work of its representatives in the hluttaw over the next three years would be crucial to winning more support.

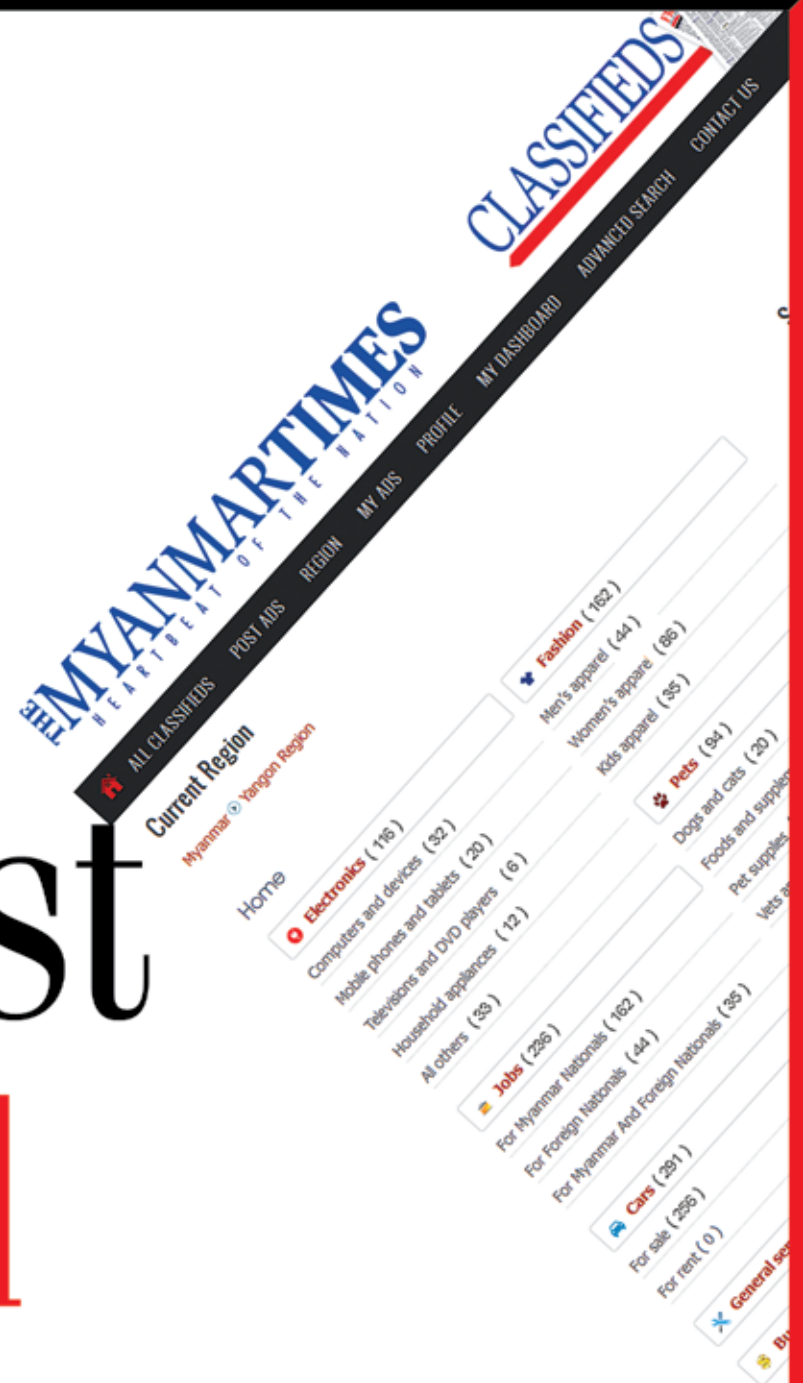

“We are preparing to improve the quality for our party’s representatives and we are members on January 1, at which U Sai Aik Paung said there were “some arguments” over how to amend the party’s policies.

But Pyithu Hluttaw representative U Sai Thiha Kyaw said agreement had quickly been reached to add a section on striving for genuine federalism in the party’s policy.

“We discussed two main themes in this conference. The two themes are how to amend the party’s policy and how to prepare for the 2015

Speed, brake failure blamed for bus smash

By Htoo Aung

A COMBINATION of rash driving and brake failure has been blamed for a nine-vehicle accident that left five people injured last week.

An out-of-control bus, that police and eyewitnesses allege was speeding on the wrong side of the road, careered into eight cars, most of which were parked, near the San Pya junction on Phone Gyi Street, Lanmadaw township, at about 8am on December 31.

Three males and two females ranging in age from 10 to 68 years were admitted to Yangon General Hospital with head, leg and arm injuries. None are thought to be in a life-threatening condition.

The driver and owner of the bus, U Aung San Oo, 35, has been charged with four offences, including rash driving and rash or negligent behaviour endangering human life, police said last week.

Ko Aung Naing Win, a taxi driver whose car was the first to be hit, said the bus was heading north to south along Phone Gyi Street when it hit him.

"The bus, a number 226, was on the wrong side and driving straight at my car. After that it hit all of the cars parked beside the road. My car was damaged. I got no serious injuries but my passenger was admitted to hospital," he said.

Police figures show the number of accidents in Yangon Region rose in 2012 to 1242, up from 1169 the previous year. However, road deaths rose significantly to 291 from 208 and injuries were up slightly to 1869 from 1830. A total of 136 accidents were reported in December 2012.

Thailand migrant talks stall

Department of Labour schedules more talks with Thai counterparts in first week of February

By Bill O'Toole

NEGOTIATIONS with Thailand over a new framework for migrant worker registration have so far failed to produce any results, an official in the Department of Labour confirmed last week.

Under the framework established in 2010 that ended on December 14, 2012, undocumented workers could apply for passports and work permits at six processing centres across Thailand.

While the process usually involved brokers and other agents and was described by the Migrant Worker's Rights Network as "extortionate in practice", the government supported the scheme, believing it was a better alternative than having its citizens toil abroad as undocumented, illegal workers.

"The Myanmar government wants every worker regulated," said Andy Hall, an expert on migrant workers at Mahidol University's Institute for Population and Social Research in Bangkok and a regular adviser to Nay Pyi Taw. "The regulation reduces the risk of exploitation."

More than one million workers from Myanmar are believed to have used the program but on December 14 the Thai government ordered that all registration centres close, warning that any remaining undocumented workers return to their home countries or face jail or deportation. So far there have been no reports of crackdowns or mass arrests, but the decision to close the centres has been perceived as a clear threat to the livelihoods of both Myanmar workers and their families back home, who often rely stay open," he said on January 5

Though it was widely reported in both Myanmar and Thailand that Thai Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra and President U Thein Sein had reached an agreement to extend the December 14 deadline by three months during a recent visit to Dawei, the Thai government has since stated that only a discussion occurred and no formal agreements have been reached.

Several proposals, such as vast majority of whom come from Myanmar – have no means of legalising their stay, a situation that activists familiar with the situation say could lead to increased exploitation of this already vulnerable community.

"The more confusion there is about the law, the more likely it is that migrants will have to pay more corruption fees," said Andy Hall.

These fees include paying protection money to immigration police in Thailand, which can put migrants into crippling debt.

Even more troubling, according to Mr Hall and Jackie Pollack of the Mae Sot-based MAP Foundation, which works for migrants' rights in Thailand, is that many workers remain completely unaware of the changes in the law and continue to pay upwards of US$500 to local brokers for registration documents. "The brokers tell people they can get documents, but the papers they end up with are [fake]," Mr Hall said.

U Myo Aung said his office's next meeting with its counterparts in Thailand was scheduled for the first week of February. However, he did not offer much grounds for optimism, saying only: "There might be favourable or unfavourable results forthcoming from the meeting."

on their remittances to survive.

Department of Labour director general U Myo Aung told The Myanmar Times that representatives from his office travelled to Bangkok on twelve separate occasions since November 26 to discuss extending the deadline or coming up with a new registration plan but Thailand refused to budge.

UNFC to meet govt peace team in January: facilitator

By Ei Ei Toe Lwin

MEMBERS of the Chiang Mai-based United Nationalities Federal Council have agreed to meet U Aung Min, the head of the government's peace negotiating team, later this month, a facilitator of the peace discussions said last week.

"When they met in Thailand, U Aung Min proposed that the UNFC visit Myanmar and talk about political dialogue," U Hla Maung Shwe from Myanmar Egress said at the Myanmar Peace Centre on January 2.

"They replied to us a few days ago and said they agreed to hold political dialogue in a third country and U Aung Min has also agreed to their wish. So we expect that we can probably meet the UNFC in January," said U Hla Maung Shwe, adding that he could not give a more exact time for the talks.

The council has 11 members, including the Kachin Independence Organisation, New Mon State Party and Karen National Union, and was established in February 2011. The goal of the UNFC is to establish a federal union in Myanmar.

Its members met U Aung Min for informal talks to discuss the peace process two times, November 2011 and October 2012.

While many of its members have agreed initial ceasefires with the new government, those agreements are considered fragile, with much more needed to be done to consolidate the peace process.

UNFC members have also threatened that they could walk away initial ceasefire agreements already reached with the U Thein Sein government unless offensives against the Kachin Independence Army are suspended.

In a January 1 statement, the group's members seriously condemned the government's role in the conflict in Kachin State and warned to the government to halt its airborne attacks. The UNFC said that if the government continues its campaign, it will have to bear responsibility for all negative impacts in the future.

U Hla Maung Shwe said the conflict between the government and KIA was a long-term issue perpetuated by the lack of trust on both sides.

"U Aung Min had agreed to hold political dialogue with all ethnic groups. And on December 13 we also invited the KIO to hold more talks but we have not received any reply letter. U Aung Min told us he will continue to try and meet them again," he said.

In an interview with The Myanmar Times in late December, U Aung Min confirmed he wanted to pursue more talks and was waiting for a response from the Kachin.

"We have offered to listen [to the KIO]. We are ready to speak with them as soon as they accept," he said.

Villagers petition president, hluttaws over eviction notice

By Soe Than Lynn

MORE than 150 farmers from a village in Nay Pyi Taw have sent a petition to the president and parliament after a government department told them to leave their homes within three days or face jail time.

The residents of Doe Nwe Ywar Thit in Dekkinathiri township sent the petition to U Thein Sein, Pyithu Hluttaw Speaker Thura U Shwe Mann and the parliament commission investigating land disputes on January 2, the day the Department of Forestry said they had to leave by.

Residents said they have lived in the village for up to 50 years but were told to leave because it is officially classified as forest land. Doe Nwe Ywar Thit has a school, monastery, 215 households and more than 1000 acres of land, including about 500 acres of farmland.

"Nay Pyi Taw township administrator U Win Myint and chief forester U Soe Win from the Department of Forestry came here on December 30 and 31 and they gave a notice with a letter from Nay Pyi Taw Council to leave the village within three days because the land is Yan Aung Myin forest reserve," said U Kyaw Swe Lat, who helped organise the petition.

"Doe Nwe ... has 500 acres of farmlands and more than 500 acres of other land. The school is more than 30 years old and has 97 students. There is also a monastery," said U Kyaw Swe Lat, who is the head of the Facilitators Network with ILO for Nay Pyi Taw.

"The villagers objected to the action of the department, which was not transparent or consultative at all.

"Instead of protesting on the street they discussed [the eviction notice with] each other in their compounds and signed the petition."

As of January 4, the villagers had not left and were yet to receive a response to their petition.

They said the disputed land was changed into a sugarcane plantation from a forest reserve by an official from Central Command in 1995-96. However, the sugarcane plantation was destroyed when the government began constructing the capital.

Daw Kyin Htwe, who owns 10 acres of land in Doe Nwe Ywar Thit, said homes in the village were 50 years old.

"I have been living here for 40 years. Now the officials ordered us to leave here within three days without any other notification or negotiation. They even threatened we would be punished with six months imprisonment ... if we would not leave," she said. "Where will we live or how will we survive if we leave? We will have no lands to live and work on. But we can consider leaving if we will be given compensation equal to our current lands and homes."

U Aung Kyin, who owns 12 acres of farmland, agreed that at the minimum suitable compensation should be offered.

"We will consider moving if we are provided a replacement place to live and also farmland that is equal to what we lose," he said.

"I have been in this village for more than 30 years and I inherited my farmland from my parents. The village has a school and I have been a member of the school committee. Minister for Agriculture and Irrigation U Myint Hlaing even sponsored the construction of the school's entrance before the election."

The villagers questioned why ministries and departments were defying Thura U Shwe Mann's instruction that they should assess the differences between land ownership maps and the situation on the ground before making any decisions about land use. — Translated by Zar Zar Soe

Reps expect long session as budget debate looms

By Kyaw Hsu Mon

THE sixth session of parliament is likely to run for longer than previous sessions because MPs will need to approve the 2013-14 budget and national planning bills, Pyithu Hluttaw Speaker Thura U Shwe Mann said last week.

The session will begin on January 9. MPs are also expected to consider a tax law, special economic zone law and investment law for Myanmar citizens, the speaker said at a coordination meeting in Nay Pyi Taw on January 1.

Representatives said they expected the session could take two months or more.

"Last year the budget session took a long time, from about January to the end of March. The agenda for that session also included the planning [law]," said U Thein Nyunt, the Pyithu Hluttaw member for Yangon's Thingangyun.

He said he had already sent one bill, two proposals and 10 questions ahead of the session but would not give further details, citing parliamentary rules.

Daw Phyu Phyu Thinn from the National League for Democracy said she would ask two budget-related questions, one on transportation and another on municipal affairs.

But political analysts said that while the budget is important the hluttaw also needed to make progress on solving internal conflicts.

However, finding time in the crowded parliament agenda could prove difficult.

"This time the budget will be the main focus but there are questions and motions left over from the former session. Some new questions and motions will be presented this time but I think they can only manage to discuss some of these," said Ko Kyaw Lin Oo, a political commentator for local publications.

He said that committees and commissions formed in respect to the fighting in Kachin State and Letpadaung mine unrest needed to show concrete progress, while MPs should also examine changes to the foreign investment law by-laws and disputes over recent ward and village-tract administrator elections.

'NLD hluttaw representatives did not take part in discussions very often ... if this continues there will be questions.'

"This session the parliamentarians will have to work very hard. But whether the efforts of the hluttaw are of benefit to the people also depends partly on the performance of the executive bodies. If they don't follow the rules passed by the legislature correctly, the aim of the parliament won't be fulfilled."

Observers will also be looking for greater input and influence from NLD representatives, who have been criticised in some quarters for their perceived passiveness since entering the hluttaw in early May 2012.

Daw Phyu Phyu Thinn said this was partly because the NLD representatives had to wait for a backlog of "hundreds of questions and motions" from previous sessions to be heard.

She said that all MPs should do their job properly, whether they were from the NLD, other parties or appointed by the commander-in-chief.

But Ko Kyaw Lin Oo said the NLD had to accept that the public expects more of its representatives than those from other parties.

"In the last session, we found that NLD representatives did not participate in discussions very often. Because they are democracy advocates, they need to work more than that. If this continues, there will be questions over what they are doing in the hluttaw," he said.

He said there had been some disbelief among observers at reports that the NLD would submit a motion to legalise prostitution during the upcoming session.

"Isn't there anything else more important than that in the country? There are still many other issues that need to be addressed, such as education, health and social security. I want to know why they raise this issue [of prostitution] now," he said.

NLD charity jumper auction raises $122,000

By Yhoon Hnin with AFP

A PAIR of colourful woolly jumpers knitted by Daw Aung San Suu Kyi fetched more than US$122,000 at a charity auction in Yangon last week.

The red, green and blue V-neck was bought by private radio station Shwe FM, owned by U Kyaw Win's Shwe Than Lwin, for K41.5 million (US$48,800) late on December 27 as part of a fundraising event, organised by the National League for Democracy, for education projects.

The second jumper was auctioned on December 28 and was snapped up by an unknown buyer for K62.5 million ($73,500).

Those close to Daw Aung San Suu Kyi gave conflicting views on whether she knitted the first garment auctioned during her long years of house arrest in Yangon, or while overseas before she returned to Myanmar to embark on her freedom struggle.

"She made it more than 25 years ago in England," said Ko Ni, a close aide of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.

"I do not know exactly when. Some of her belongings have arrived from England recently."

But a member of the NLD leader's security team said she made the first jumper while under house arrest in Myanmar.

The money raised from the sale will fund a series of education schemes, according to U Phyo Min Thein, an auction organiser as well as NLD Pyithu Hluttaw representative.

"We will use the money to help troubled Myanmar migrants in other countries, poor schools and those who live in areas where it is difficult to access the education," he said.

Other programs include coordinating with the public on education policy reform and scholarships for outstanding students from disadvantaged backgrounds, he said.

The auction was accompanied by a charity concert opened by Daw these skills but the system of rote learning used in the past 50 years didn't contribute to the country's development," she said.

Aung San Suu Kyi.

She said education was a basic requirement for unity and Myanmar needed to reform its education system to improve the lives of its future generations.

"Without learning, we don't have the courage to face the obstacles in our lives and the ability to redevelop the country," she said. "Our country is poor because of the system of government rather than a lack of natural resources. To reform the system we need a good education system that is open to all from children to adults."

"I don't just mean to read a lot of books but to face and find out solutions to problems with justice. The education delivered in the classroom should deliver process, particularly national reconciliation.

"Children need to learn the real history to take lessons for the future. The history curriculum will change to take into account different perspectives. Students will also have the opportunity to learn English, Myanmar and the mother tongue language for ethnic minority groups. If we can better learn the cultures and traditions of these groups then this can facilitate national reconciliation. We will also allow young people to learn the subjects of social science and political science. We will start to form universities, research centres and institutions free from the centralisation of the past."

Health research congress this week

THE Department of Medical Research (Lower Myanmar) will host the 41st Myanmar Health Research Congress in Yangon this week.

Researchers from seven Ministry of Health departments will present 88 research papers at the January 7-11 congress, a spokesperson said.

"Twelve academic symposiums on current health problems in Myanmar will also be presented," said Dr Win Aung, director of the Diagnostic and Vaccine Research Centre in the Department of Medical Research (Lower Myanmar).

The research congress was first held in 1965. It aims to improve research standards and ensure research findings are used effectively, Dr Win Aung said.

The congress will be held at No 5, Ziwaka Road, Dagon township. An exhibition of medical equipment, pharmaceutical products and laboratory reagents will be held concurrently during the congress from 9am to 4:30pm daily.

UK scholarship deadline extended

BUDDING scholars now have until January 20 to submit an application for a British scholarship program.

The deadline was pushed back from January 2 and the British embassy in Yangon said last week it "encourages Burma's future leaders to submit their application for the United Kingdom's most prestigious scholarship scheme".

About 700 scholarships will be given out to applicants from 100 countries, with recipients normally undertaking a one-year Master's degree.

While scholarships can be given for study in any subject area and at any British university, applicants from Myanmar with a background in human rights, politics, conflict resolution, economics, journalism and a number of other areas are particularly encouraged to apply. Full details are available at <http://www.chevening.org/burma/>.

South Korea donates $200,000 to quake victims

By Aye Sapay Phyu

THE government of South Korea on December 26 donated US$200,025 to the Myanmar Red Cross Society to help victims of an earthquake that struck upper Myanmar in November.

The South Korean ambassador to Myanmar, Mr Kim Hae-yong, handed the donated cash to Dr Tha Hla Shwe, president of MRCS, at the society's head office in Yangon.

U Maung Maung Khin, head of the society's Disaster Management Division, said there was a need to expand rehabilitation activities in areas affected by the magnitude 6.8 earthquake, which struck near the town of Thabeikkyin in Mandalay Region on November 11.

"There are lots of buildings damaged to varying degrees, especially in Singu and Thabeikkyin townships in Mandalay Region, and Shwebo township in Sagaing Region," he said.

"We need to apply earthquake-resistant designs to the reconstructed houses, schools and other structures because the area is an earthquake-prone region. Both technical and material support will be needed for reconstruction in these areas."

He said that according to a survey conducted by MRCS in November in Singu and Thabeikkyin townships, 1434 houses, 138 schools, 391 pagodas, 200 monasteries and 114 other religious buildings were damaged in the disaster.

U Maung Maung Khin said MRCS will also continue its other post-disaster programs in affected areas of Mandalay and Sagaing regions, including providing public education about earthquakes and helping victims in need of psychological support.

U Thein Sein gives first New Year address

YANGON — President U Thein Sein on January 1 called for "mutual trust" between his government and the people in his first New Year address since taking power and ushering in sweeping reforms.

He pledged a new drive to communicate more directly with the nation in a radio speech he said aimed to "bridge the gap" between the authorities and the public.

"The most important ingredient for the success of Myanmar's democratic transition is the mutual trust between the government and the people," he said.

U Thein Sein, who took the helm of a quasi-civilian regime in 2011, said the world had been "amazed" by the nation's progress last year.

Western sanctions against the former pariah state began to be dismantled in 2012 in response to reforms, including the release of hundreds of political prisoners and the election of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi to parliament.

But U Thein Sein warned that the swift pace of change should not encourage unrealistic expectations from a public eager for further opening up after decades of military rule.

"What the esteemed people and our government need to be conscious of is the gap between the demands of the people and the capacity of our government," he said, adding the country still had "many aspects to reform".

U Thein Sein last week set his sights on graft in a televised address in Nay Pyi Taw, saying democratic developments in the nation depended on good governance.

US President Barack Obama praised Myanmar's "remarkable" reforms during a landmark visit to the country in November, but warned "the flickers of progress that we have seen must not be extinguished".

Govt begins power rationing in Yangon

By Htoo Aung

YANGON Electricity Supply Board last week began rationing power to small and medium factories in residential areas, an official said.

Board chairman U Aung Khaing said the cuts came into effect on January 1, with power rationed from 4pm to 11pm, reducing demand by 200 megawatts.

"Firstly we will reduce the supply of electricity to SMEs in residential areas and after that to factories owned by the government and last to industrial zones. We do not have enough electricity from hydropower plants between January and June," he said.

"There will be more cuts in February because consumption increases at the same time as production from hydropower dams decreases. It is a great problem for us every year," he said.

About 72 percent of electricity to Yangon, which has about 900,000 installed electricity meters, comes from hydropower, while the rest is sourced from natural gas.

But other regions have already been suffering from electricity rationing since December 2012, U Aung Khaing said.

Even with an electrification rate of less than one-quarter — ministry figures show just 22pc of households had an electricity connection in 2011 — U Aung Khaing said electricity supply met only three-quarters of demand, which is about 2060 megawatts.

"The current supply is just 75pc of the amount needed for the whole country," he said.

U Khin Maung Zaw, director of the Department of Electric Power, said the ministry will supply Mandalay, Pyaw, Magwe and Bago with a 1-megawatt generator each in March to help them cope when demand peaks in the hot season, which runs from March through May.

Meanwhile, gas turbines are being imported from Spain, Germany, Austria, Singapore and Malaysia to help meet demand during summer.

The government has indicated it will in future try to increase electricity generation from natural gas, which is not subject to seasonal variations, to ensure enough power is available during the hot season. In December, United States firm General Electric said it had been selected to supply natural gas turbines to a 100-megawatt plant in Ahlone township, which is expected to come online by the second quarter of this year.

However, a May 2012 report prepared by the Ash Centre for Democratic Governance and Innovation at Harvard University warned that to catch up with current demand and cope with increased electrification "a massive increase in electricity generation and transmission is needed very quickly".

"Growth rates doubling electricity output every four to five years are probably needed for a decade," said the report, titled "Electricity in Myanmar: The Missing Prerequisite for Development".

ABSDF delegation urges political dialogue for peace

By Ei Ei Toe Lwin

MEMBERS of the All Burma Students' Democratic Front have backed ethnic calls for the government to engage in political dialogue, following a historic visit that ended last week.

The visit comes as soldiers from the ABSDF, a student army formed in 1988 to overthrow the government, fight on the frontlines against Tatmadaw troops in Kachin State.

"Everyone has a duty to get genuine peace and [of all stakeholders] the government has the most duty. All of these conflicts have occurred because of a lack of equality. But we don't want to solve problems using weapons anymore. We want to solve them at the [negotiating] table through peaceful means," ABSDF president U Than Khe said at a press conference at Yangon's Myanmar Peace Centre on January 3.

"But a ceasefire agreement is not enough to get genuine peace. We need to have a political dialogue that can result in an acceptable resolution for all ethnic minorities," he said.

Nine ABSDF members officially visited Myanmar for the first time from December 18 to January 3. During the two-week stay, they met Minister for the President's Office U Aung Min, and members of the 88 Generation, Democratic Party for a New Society, student organisations and ethnic groups to discuss the current political situation.

They also met family members and ex-ABSDF members.

U Than Khe said the ABSDF was willing to work with all groups to create genuine peace and national reconciliation, which he describes as the most important aims of Myanmar's political transition.

Under the new government, the ABSDF has met the government peace negotiating team led by U Aung Min three times and discussed the importance of holding a comprehensive political dialogue and ensuring the constitution guarantees democracy, human rights, equality and the right to self-determination.

But U Than Khe said it was hard to forget the repression and brutal tactics of the military regime.

"We have struggled for many years to get equality and self-determination. During this period, thousands of our members have lost their lives and some have been jailed. We will never forget these bitter experiences and we have asked U Aung Min to free our members who are in prison. There are still 21 members in prison," he said.

Ma Lay Lone, another member of the ABSDF delegation, said the group's members would continue to support other ethnic armed groups until they had reached an agreement to ensure equal rights and greater autonomy.

She confirmed the ABSDF is yet to reach a ceasefire agreement with the government.

Pagoda trustees aim to increase museum visitors

A NEW walkway connecting Shwedagon's Buddhism museum to the pagoda's main platform is under construction at the revered site, an official from the pagoda's board of trustees said last week.

U Win Kyaing said the platform would enable pilgrims to visit the museum more easily and will be completed within a year.

The museum opened on July 14, 1992 and displays paintings and other art related to Buddhist culture, welcoming about 2000 visitors a day.

But U Win Kyaing said most visitors to Shwedagon do not even know the museum exists because it is some distance from the main pagoda platform.

"The museum is isolated in the western precinct although it has items and decorations that will likely attract pilgrims. We think the new platform direct from the pagoda would help people visit more easily," he said.

As well as building the platform, the project will see the museum facilities upgraded and landscaping carried out in the vicinity of the building.

The board has already placed a sandstone Buddha image donated by the Indian government in the western precinct of the pagoda and also plans to place a 2.5-tonne bell donated by a Buddhist association from the United States in the area.

"There are so many places to learn about Buddhist culture at Shwedagon but we need to make them more attractive for pilgrims," U Win Kyaing said.

Myanmar HTC phones to go on sale

By Khin Su Wai

TAIWANESE smartphone manufacturer HTC will begin shipping handsets equipped with a Myanmar-language operating system later this month, a source in the industry said.

The phones will be available from showrooms in Mandalay and Yangon from the third week of January, said U Tun Myint, owner of Min Computer, which produced the San Myanmar font used in the operating system software, known as Myanmar OS. Min Computer will also partner with HTC to sell the phones in Mandalay.

"They will launch seven models with Myanmar OS ranging in price from K150,000 to more than K600,000. The HTC showroom will open in Yangon at KMD Centre and the showroom for Mandalay at Min Computer. KMD will also be the authorised service centre for HTC," U Tun Myint said.

"For android phones, people can only use about 20 percent of functions in Myanmar language. But these smart phones from HTC will use a complete Myanmar-language operating system, it is totally different because the menus in the phone and commands are all in Myanmar language," he said.

"But HTC have also put a program to convert from San Myanmar to Zawgyi because many people use Zawgyi."

The agreement between the companies was reached when HTC chief executive officer and founder, Peter Chou, visited Myanmar in May 2012. Mr Chou was born in Mandalay.

"When Peter Chou... came to Myanmar we discussed about the Myanmar font and I explained the advantages of San Myanmar. We got a contract with HTC for Myanmar OS," U Tun Myint said.

HTC did not respond to requests for comment last week.

Finance Corporation
World Bank Group

IFC, a member of the World Bank Group, is the largest global development institution focused exclusively on the private sector. We help developing countries achieve sustainable growth by financing investment, mobilizing capital in international financial markets, and providing advisory services to businesses and governments. In FY12, our investments reached an all-time high of more than $20 billion, leveraging the power of the private sector to create jobs, spark innovation, and tackle the world's most pressing development challenges. For more information, visit www.ifc.org.

IFC's engagement in Myanmar focuses on promoting inclusive growth through investment and advisory engagements that: i) improve the investment climate to enable the broader population to participate in and benefit from Myanmar's economic reform program and support investment likely to create job opportunities for the population; ii) increase access to finance for micro, small and medium enterprises by supporting the establishment of commercial microfinance and to support the banking sector to increase lending to SMEs; and iii) to support the development of infrastructure to reduce key impediments to commerce and reduce operating costs.

Our operations in Myanmar will grow in 2013, and we are looking for qualified applicants for the following five positions. Successful candidates will be expected to contribute to the development of IFC's Myanmar Program by developing excellent client relations, designing and implementing projects for meaningful development impact, and ensuring IFC procedures are respected. In addition, successful applicants are expected to actively identify new opportunities for IFC, provide input to IFC's strategy and build relationships with industry stakeholders.

Operations Officer, Investment Climate Program (Position #123013)

Our work to support the Investment Climate in Myanmar seeks to improve the policy and regulatory environment for doing business. To achieve this goal, projects support the development and implementation of key policies, regulations and institutions related to investment and business operations. Activities include supporting dialogue among public and private sector stakeholders; providing advisory services on private sector development issues; advocating for policy reforms through publications, seminars and the media, and promoting sustainable business practices.

Please review the complete job description and selection criteria at <http://www.ifc.org/careers> and choose the vacancy number 123013.

Operations Officer, Access to Finance Program (Position #122967)

IFC's Access to Finance Program in Myanmar will include programs in microfinance, bank advisory, financial infrastructure and mobile banking. In these areas, IFC is engaging at both the sector level as well as with selected institutions to create a demonstration effect in the marketplace, with the goal to support sustainable private sector institutions that serve a large number of low-income, urban and rural households.

Please review the complete job description and selection criteria at <http://www.ifc.org/careers> and choose the vacancy number 122967.

Senior Investment Officer (Position #123067)

IFC is seeking an experienced Investment Officer to join our current team to develop new business opportunities and manage our local client relationships. The incumbent will play an active role in developing IFC's investment portfolio through business development, establishing strong client relationships and working on project proposals. The successful candidate will interact directly with our local and global clients, and will work with IFC colleagues from headquarters and regional offices. While prior experience will be emphasized, the incumbent will have the opportunity to upgrade skills by attending on-site and off-site training seminars.

Country Officer (Position #123068)

The Country Officer is a senior position responsible for developing and maintaining relations with the business community, government officials and the development partner community, and promoting and coordinating IFC's investment and advisory activities in Myanmar.

Please review the complete job description and selection criteria at <http://www.ifc.org/careers> and choose the vacancy number 123068.

Program Assistant (Position #123053)

The successful candidate will provide logistical and secretarial support for the Myanmar office, coordinate extensively with service units and liaise frequently with team members both at headquarters and in the field, as well as with external counterparts. The Program Assistant is also assigned responsibility for additional tasks, including translating/drafting a variety of standard documents, applying effective proofreading and grammar skills.

Please review the complete job description and selection criteria at <http://www.ifc.org/careers> and choose the vacancy number 123053.

Interested candidates should apply on-line at <http://www.ifc.org/careers> and choose the relevant vacancy number. Please note that you need to register before submitting your application. The closing date is 13th January 2013. Only applicants selected for interview will be contacted.

NGOs use theatre to promote gender equality in villages

By Ma Ning

FOREIGN organisations are using community theatre to promote gender equality and the advancement of women in Myanmar.

The community-led theatrical program received financial and technical support from the British Council and is designed and implemented by Francois-Xavier Bagnoud (FXB), a Swiss non-government organisation. The program sees young people recruited as peer educators to write gender-related stories based on real-life incidents and then act them out for communities.

“We provide a trainer who comes from the UK to work with the young actors who learn techniques and how to convey information through theatre,” said Mr Kevin Mackenzie, director and cultural attaché at the British Council.

Each story deals with a particular problem the community is facing and follows a format where people’s misconceptions about issues such as gender, sex and reproductive health lead to a tragic ending. The cast interacts with the audience at the end of each play, asking whether they liked the ending, and spectators are then invited to revise the play and replay their version of the story on stage with the cast.

“I think theatre as a channel for education has been around for many, many centuries probably. It’s not a new idea itself but certainly for this kind of work I think it’s a fresh idea,” said Mr Mackenzie.

While the idea might be imported, FXB program director Daw Toe Toe Yi said theatre is an effective method of communication in a country like Myanmar, where social attitudes, religious practices and other cultural factors make it difficult for people to openly discuss issues such as gender and sex.

The theatre program is part of a project funded by the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) that aims to promote gender equality, reproductive health and awareness about the 2014 census in four villages in Thanlyin, Twante and Shwe Pyi Thar townships.

Under the program, FXB and UNFPA have been providing a variety of free services to the communities since June 2012 through Community Learning Centres, including reproductive health services, vocational training and interest-free loans.

“When the program was announced in the village, I signed up right away. I’ve attended the five-month training without missing any classes,” Daw Aye Thu, a 32-year-old resident of Kayin Seik village in Yangon Region’s Thanlyin township, said last month.

“By learning professional skills such as embroidery, I’ve gained more confidence. I’m excited to be able to work and earn a living on my own rather than just stay at home doing all the housekeeping,” she said.

The project will be expanded to conflict-hit areas in future, according to Daw Khin Zar Naing, a national program officer for gender at UNFPA.

She said UNFPA, in partnership with United Nations Development Program, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation and the government have started discussions towards establishing relief camp-based Community Learning Centres in Kachin and Rakhine states.

One potential problem for the organisations is how to ensure the centres are sustainable in the long term. “We realise we can only be here for a certain period,” said Daw Toe Toe Yi. “But we are involving the local communities from the planning stage so that this is their project. They own it and they need to sustain it on their own.”

Govt pledges unrest will not weaken ties with China

Thura U Shwe Mann promises to ‘responsibly implement’ economic agreements

By Ma Ning

THE Myanmar government will honour its agreements with China and recent “difficulties” – presumably a reference to the Letpadaung mine conflict – will not harm bilateral cooperation, the Chinese embassy in Myanmar said in a recent statement.

President U Thein Sein met a Chinese delegation led by Mr Zhang Guoqing, head of Chinese arms manufacturer China North Industries Corp (Norinco), and accompanied by Mr Li Junhua, Chinese ambassador to Myanmar, at the Presidential Palace in Nay Pyi Taw on December 24, the statement said.

Norinco is the major investor in the Letpadaung mine project, which has been the centre of months of unrest over allegations of land confiscations and environmental damage.

China’s state media outlet Xinhua quoted U Thein Sein as saying that his government attaches importance to the smooth implementation of projects between Myanmar and China.

Myanmar will responsibly implement the agreements between governments and between companies, including that with Norinco, said Pyithu Hluttaw Speaker Thura U Shwe Mann, according to the embassy statement. He also stressed that bilateral cooperation would “not weaken despite some difficulties”, it said.

The meeting came after the Myanmar government initiated a review into the Letpadaung copper mine project in December, following a bloody crackdown on protesters by police on November 29.

The project is a joint venture between Norinco subsidiary Wanbao Mining and the military-owned Union of Myanmar Economic Holdings Ltd (UMEHL).

The crackdown came after villagers staged a number of illegal protests.

Scores of monks were injured in the crackdown and the government

‘We will place more emphasis on the direct communication between people of the two countries so as to lay a solid foundation of public opinion.’

formally apologised for its role on December 15.

An investigation commission chaired by DawAung San SuuKywi was formed on December 1 and tasked with probing the long-term effects of the copper mine project on the local community. The Chinese embassy said it welcomed a fair and balanced investigation but warned that cancelling the project would dissuade other Chinese companies from investing in Myanmar.

“In the future, China will consistently strengthen economic cooperation with Myanmar, promote cultural exchange between two countries and continue to offer humanitarian aids,” Chinese ambassador Mr Li said in a new year address titled “China’s development is an opportunity for Myanmar”.

“Meanwhile we will place more emphasis on the direct communication between people of [the] two countries so as to lay a solid foundation of public opinion to strengthen the strategic partnership between two countries,” Mr Li said.

On December 25, the embassy also published a special feature on its website detailing the disaster relief and cultural exchange China offered in recent years. “Chinese companies have complied with their social responsibilities. They have provided US$71 million worth of aid to Myanmar’s education, public hygiene, disaster relief and so on and created 15,000 jobs,” the embassy said.

Myanmar established diplomatic ties with China in 1950 and the two countries agreed to establish a “comprehensive strategic partnership” during U Thein Sein’s visit to Beijing in May 2011.

China is Myanmar’s biggest trade partner in 2011-2012 with a bilateral trade volume exceeding US$5 billion, according to Myanmar’s Central Statistical Organisation.

BTMU bolsters Japanese enterprises with CB deal

By Aye Thidar Kyaw

THE Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi UFJ (BTMU), Japan's largest bank, signed a Memorandum of Understanding with domestic Co-Operative Bank amid widespread interest for investment in Myanmar, according to BTMU's president.

BTMU is aiming to support Japanese companies soon to enter Myanmar and act as a technical adviser to CB Bank, announced BTMU president Nobuyuki Hirano during a signing ceremony held at the Sedona Hotel in Yangon on December 27.

"Since March 2011, the new government has been making Myanmar a democracy. These efforts have been attracting foreign companies to Asia's new market. A lot of Japanese companies will target Myanmar for foreign investment," he said.

BTMU first opened its representative office in Yangon almost 60 years ago and has recently been serving as a liaison for Overseas Development Assistance, he added.

CB's managing director, U Pe Myint, said that BTMU will provide commercial lending, trade and foreign exchange services to CB.

"There are still many details we need to plan in the MoU. We will discuss it at a later date and we will likely release the details this coming March," U Pe Myint said.

with 28 branches currently operating in the country and 42 branches slated to open by 2014. The bank plans to set up at least 30 ATMs around cities in Myanmar, offering international card transactions such as Visa and MasterCard, said U Pe Myint.

According to the Japanese External Trade Organisation (JETRO), almost 300 Japanese companies visited Myanmar in 2011: a 50 percent increase from the previous year.

Japanese Mizuho Bank opened its representative office in Yangon last April and Sumitomo Mitsui Banking Corporation also opened a representative office last August to support Japanese enterprises.

Study aims for sugar output

By Suu Ye Ni

THE Myanmar Sugarcane Dealers Association is planning soon to study sugarcane plantations and sugar production in Thailand, an official from the association said last week.

"[The study] will probably be during the end of January. Our plans were submitted to the ministry concerned. The study group will have more than 30 members. Officials from sugar mills, farmers and members of small, medium and large industries will be included in the group," U Soe Lin, chairman of the Myanmar Sugarcane Dealers Association told The Myanmar Times.

The study will take about one week, he added.

Officials from the Thai government said the study will cover sugarcane cultivation, harvesting, transportation, crushing and also sugar refining.

There are about 50 sugar refineries currently in operation in Thailand. The country produces about ten million tonnes of sugar per year. Local consumption is over two million tonnes per year, while Thailand exports over seven million tonnes per year.

"Myanmar only produces 380,000 tonnes of sugar annually. The reason that the output from Thailand is different despite the fact that we border each other is because of a difference in investment and policy," U Soe Lin said.

"Thailand uses mechanised farming. The state invests money in their big factories. The output turns out well because of high calibre machinery and good farming techniques," he added.

There are 21 sugar mills in Myanmar, and 19 are currently in operation. A total of 30,000 tonnes of sugar is produced per day, which is sufficient for domestic consumption. - Translated by Thit Lwin

Japan's Aso targets Myanmar markets

By Andy Sharp

JAPAN'S Finance Minister Taro Aso met with Myanmar's president and senior officials on January 3 in a sign the nation plans to tap a market of 64 million people that has been dominated by China.

The trip is Aso's first foreign visit since Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's cabinet took office last month. It coincides with the US and the United Nations expressing concern over government strikes against ethnic rebels in Myanmar's north.

Japan's push into the nation bordering India and China may produce trade opportunities for its stagnating economy while helping President U Thein Sein meet a pledge to attract labour-intensive industries to create jobs. Competing Chinese and Japanese efforts risk further straining relations between Asia's two biggest economies, already at odds over islands in the East China Sea.

"China considers Myanmar as its turf, and China is very sensitive of the US and Japan making headway," said Takuji Okubo, Tokyo-based chief economist at Japan Macro Advisors. "Myanmar could be another source of conflict."

Aso, who is also deputy prime minister, will visit an economic zone south of Yangon that companies including Marubeni Corp and Sumitomo Corp may help to develop. He met President U Thein Sein at the presidential palace in Nay Pyi Taw.

The US is "deeply troubled" that the military is using aerial weapons in the region of Kachin, State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland said on January 2. UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon said that the government should "desist from any action that could endanger the lives of civilians" or intensify the conflict.

Democratic reforms since President U Thein Sein took power in 2011 prompted Western nations to ease sanctions and galvanised lawmakers to focus on economic growth after about five decades of military rule left Myanmar disconnected from the global financial system.

Direct foreign investment into the nation will have risen 40 percent to a record US$3.99 billion last year, according to a forecast from the International Monetary Fund. Rich resources span gas, gems and possibly oil, the World Bank says.

The Asian Development Bank forecasts that Myanmar's gross domestic product may expand 6.3pc this year after an estimated 6pc gain in 2012. The country has high potential for rapid growth and development given its natural resources, abundant labor force and strategic location between China and India, the ADB said in an August report.

"Myanmar could become one of the next rising stars in Asia if it can successfully leverage its rich endowments," ADB said.

Relations between Japan and China have been strained by a dispute over sovereignty of uninhabited islands in the East China Sea. China accounted for about half of the foreign investment Myanmar has attracted since 2008, according to the Central Statistical Organisation, a government agency in Nay Pyi Taw.

In 2011, President U Thein Sein halted work on the $3.6 billion Myitsone hydropower dam across the Ayeyarwady River that was being built with China Power Investment Corp, saying the project was against the "will of the people." China Power called the decision "bewildering" and said it would hold talks with the government to resume the project.

China National Petroleum Corp, China's biggest energy producer, is building pipelines in Myanmar, and China Nonferrous Metals Co is developing a nickel mine in the country.

"Myanmar has been a kind of protectorate of China, but Myanmar is currently seeking alternative sources of investment, given the excessive presence of China," said Okubo, who formerly worked at Goldman Sachs Group Inc and Societe Generale SA.

Aso had planned to visit Myanmar before his ministerial appointment, as a member of the Japan-Myanmar Association, a group established to boost Japanese business opportunities.

In November, Japan said it will provide Myanmar with a 50 billion-yen ($573 million) loan once the country clears overdue debt with the ADB and World Bank. The settlement follows a plan by Japan, Myanmar's biggest creditor, to forgive 303.5 billion yen in debt. - Bloomberg

The Myanmar Times sits down with Maybank's John Wong

John Wong currently holds the position of managing director, head of transaction banking, global wholesale banking at Malaysia's Maybank. Mr Wong is responsible for both the domestic as well as regional transaction banking business, with a strong focus on ASEAN and Greater China. He oversees cash management, trade finance, financial institutions, custody services, trustees and factoring solutions.

When did Maybank first open a representative office in Yangon?

We opened our representative office in Yangon on April 11, 1995.

What services does it provide? And how many clients does it service?

Under the Representative License granted by the Central Bank of Myanmar, our role is to act as a liaison for Maybank Group's operations worldwide and to promote trade and investment flows. In addition to that we also provide advisory services to Maybank customers who are interested to invest or conduct business in Myanmar.

Maybank began offering money transfers from Malaysia to Myanmar in March. How successful has this program been? How many clients have used this service to send money back to Myanmar?

Initially, the remittance to Myanmar started with only four banks in July 2012. Subsequently, more banks from Myanmar came onboard and partnered with us. Since then, Maybank has handled over 4,000 transactions with a total value of more than US$8 million. We are seeing an increasing trend in number and volume of transactions every month.

How much does Maybank charge for this service?

Currently Maybank charges RM10 per successful transaction. This is the normal transaction fee that we charge for this service everywhere we are. This is also comparable to what other banks would have charged their counterparties.

Maybank is working with four domestic banks to offer this service - Asia Green Development Bank, Co-Operative Bank, Ayeyarwady Bank and Kanbawza: How effective have these banks proven as partners?

These banks are very supportive and the service is provided promptly by them to ensure that beneficiaries receive their funds timely. We are working closely with these banks to continue improve our combined service quality.

What are Maybank's plans for the future in Myanmar?

Maybank is keen to set up our banking operations and offer banking services as soon as foreign owned banks are permitted to do so by the Central Bank of Myanmar.

Maybank, with our presence in all the ASEAN countries, is ready to support the demand from our clients and investors who have businesses or are exploring investment opportunities in Myanmar.

We believe being an ASEAN focused bank, we have a lot to offer to help the country's economic development as well as the development of the banking market and the capital market in the near future.

What makes Maybank stand out from the other 16 representative banks in Myanmar?

The most important differential factor is the fact that we are an ASEAN bank focused primarily in the ASEAN region. Our objective within ASEAN is to have a meaningful presence within each of the country in the region in such a way that allows us to participate in the local community which is consistent with our mission to humanize banking. We are very cognizant that while banking is a business of collecting and mobilizing deposits in a responsible and prudent manner, it is ultimately a business about people and about the community.

While waiting for such opportunity, we continue to support the government's effort to promote inflow of remittances through banking channels. In that space, Maybank is one of the first to work with local banks promoting such services.

We will continue to work alongside the local banks to help promote Myanmar in international banking through acceptance, negotiation and discounting of their Letters of Credit.

What steps does the bank plan to take to boost its profile in Myanmar?

Maybank will continue to be an agent to promote Myanmar's trade and investment through regular participation in seminars conducted in Myanmar as well as those held overseas.

With the recent opening of our branch in Laos, the Maybank Group has completed its presence across all 10 ASEAN countries. We are now able to support our regional customers as they expand their operations across ASEAN and also facilitate greater intra ASEAN trade and investment.

As part of our corporate responsibility, Maybank will continue to support the Central Bank of Myanmar by sponsoring seminars and engaging experts to share their knowledge with a view to further share and enhance skills and capabilities with the relevant people.

What does Maybank think the next step will be in terms of Myanmar's banking development?

At the 2012 Tokyo Annual Meeting of the IMF and World Bank, Central Bank of Myanmar was quoted as saying that they will be adopting the 3-phase approach under the Banking Sector Development Strategy; permitting Myanmar Private Banks to form partnerships with foreign banks, to be followed with the phase of allowing foreign banks to establish locally incorporated 100 percent owned subsidiary and eventually granting these banks full branch licenses. We believe this is a step towards the right direction and we hope that the implementation can be expedited.

What is the most important issue holding back development?

Coming from a country that has been through a similar phase and having witnessed the same in other countries in ASEAN, we understand the complexity and the need to have a proper plan to ensure that there will be forward progress and that the progress can be sustained. We have full confidence that the government will come up with a workable plan and we look forward to participate in giving our inputs, if we are given the opportunity, as well as participating in it.

How long does the company think it will take until foreign banks are allowed to operate in Myanmar on a commercial basis?

There have been no dates mentioned but we hope that it can be implemented as soon as possible, especially to prepare the country for 2015 as we gear-up for the ASEAN Economic Community.

Tourists lost in Thailand mean hotel stay boom

By Suttinee Yuvejwattana and Supunnabul Suwannakij

"LOST in Thailand," a low-budget Chinese comedy about the travels of two rival businessmen and a pancake-maker through Thailand, may help the Southeast Asian nation attract a record number of tourists this year.

More than 30 million people have seen the film since its debut on December 12, according to China's official Xinhua News Agency. China overtook Malaysia last year as Thailand's biggest source of overseas tourists, and the film's popularity could help increase total arrivals by 10 percent in 2013, according to the Association of Thai Travel Agents.

"The movie is helping boost sentiment and is increasing people's desire to visit," Sisdivachr Cheewarattanaporn, the group's president, said on January 3 in an interview. "The global economic situation isn't a big issue as we've seen the tourism industry grow a lot despite the slowdown. People who love traveling continue to do it anyway."

Thailand is luring Chinese tourists away from Japan after a territorial dispute between Asia's biggest economies led to a travel boycott last year. Hotel rates in Bangkok also remain about half those in Singapore and Hong Kong, while the baht's gain in the past year has been overshadowed by bigger increases in the value of the Singapore dollar and the Philippine peso.

"Foreign tourists are flocking back to Thailand," said Sittidath Praserturunguan, an analyst at Krungsri Securities Co. "The Thai tourism industry is very resilient, with diversified sources of travelers from China and India to Russia," he said, adding that travel-related stocks will outperform the benchmark SET Index this year.

China accounted for 13pc of the 19.8 million visitors to Thailand in the first 11 months of last year, according to tourism ministry data. The Tourism Authority of Thailand forecasts total visitors may rise to 24.5 million this year, from an estimate of more than 21 million in 2012.

"China is really just blowing everyone out of the water," said William Heinecke, chief executive officer of Minor International Pcl, Thailand's biggest hotel operator. "The big growth is coming from Russia and China."

Chinese tour groups added additional charter flights to Thailand as demand for travel to Japan declined because of the territorial dispute between the two countries, said Sisdivachr from the Association of Thai Travel Agents. - Bloomberg

S&P 500 climbs to five-year high

By Stephen Kirkland and Inyoung Hwang

US stocks rose, sending the Standard & Poor's 500 Index to a five-year high, as government data showed employers added more workers while the jobless rate held at a level that's unlikely to hasten the end of Federal Reserve stimulus. Treasuries erased early losses.

The S&P 500 added 0.5 percent to 1,466.47 at 4pm in New York to extend a weekly gain to 4.6pc and send it to its best closing level since December 2007. The Stoxx Europe 600 Index added 0.4pc, closing at the highest since February 2011. The Dollar Index increased 0.1pc after earlier jumping as much as 0.6pc. Treasury 10-year yields fell one basis point to 1.90pc after rising for three days and touching the highest since April earlier. Silver and gold slid.

US employers added workers in December at about the same pace as in the prior month even as lawmakers struggled to reach a budget deal, according to the Labour Department's monthly payrolls report. Fed policy makers said on January 4 they will probably end their $85 billion monthly bond purchases, known as quantitative easing, in 2013, according to minutes of their December 11-12 meeting released on the same day.

The jobs report "reinforces the view that the labor market is healing but at a very slow pace," Joseph Tanious, a New York-based global market strategist for JPMorgan Funds, which oversees $400 billion, said by telephone. "It's a good report that suggests the economy is healing but it's not so good that the Fed might pull out of QE. It's been a shortened week but jam packed and everybody's still digesting everything." The S&P 500 retreated 0.2pc on January 4 after the release of the Fed minutes. The gauge soared 2.5pc on January 2 after Republicans and Democrats agreed on a compromise budget that avoided the so-called fiscal cliff of sweeping tax increases and spending cuts.

The VIX, as the Chicago Board Options Exchange Volatility Index is known, slid 5pc on January 5 to a four-month low of 13.83. The benchmark gauge of US equity options tumbled 39pc since December 28, its biggest weekly loss on record.

Commodity, industrial and financial companies helped lead the market's gain on January 5, with Walt Disney Co, Johnson & Johnson and JPMorgan Chase & Co climbing at least 1.8pc for the biggest gains in the Dow Jones Industrial Average.

Eli Lilly & Co jumped 3.7pc as the drugmaker forecast 2013 earnings above analyst expectations. Citigroup Inc advanced 2.5pc after Goldman Sachs Group Inc added the bank to its conviction buy list. Avon Products Inc gained 3.2pc after Bank of America Corp raised its rating on the stock.

Apple Inc slumped 2.8pc, the most since December 14. Deutsche Bank AG said supply-chain movements suggest iPhone and iPad production may be declining. Technology shares had the only decline among the 10 main S&P 500 groups.

S&P 500 futures extended gains before the open of exchanges in New York after the jobs data were released. Payrolls rose by 155,000 workers last month following a revised 161,000 advance in November that was more than initially estimated, Labour Department figures showed on January 5. The median estimate of 82 economists surveyed by Bloomberg called for an increase of 152,000. The unemployment rate held at 7.8pc, matching the lowest since December 2008.

"At 7.8, that tells us we still have an unemployment problem and the Fed will still be engaged," Mohamed El-Erian, chief executive officer of Pacific Investment Management Co, said on Bloomberg Television.

Among European stocks, Fresnillo Plc, the world's biggest primary silver producer, sank 4pc in London trading as UBS AG downgraded the shares and the precious metal retreated. ThromboGenics NV jumped 3.3pc after confirming the launch date for its Jetrea vision restoration treatment. Fresnillo Plc, the world's biggest primary silver producer, slid 4pc after UBS AG downgraded the shares. Randgold Resources Ltd lost 4pc as the price of the metal fell.

The US currency climbed as much as 1.3pc to 88.41 yen, the strongest level since July 2010. The euro was up 0.2pc at $1.3080 after losing 0.4pc earlier to the weakest level in three weeks.

The yen weakened at least 0.7pc against all major peers and is set for an eighth weekly drop versus the US currency, the longest run of losses since 1989, amid speculation the government will add more monetary stimulus.

The S&P GSCI gauge of 24 commodities dropped 0.5pc as silver, lead, aluminum, zinc and gold lost at least 1pc to help lead declines. Oil capped its biggest weekly gain in three months, increasing 17 cents to $93.09 and extending its gain since December 28 to 2.5pc.

The MSCI Emerging Markets Index fell 0.4pc, declining for the first time in 10 days to snap the longest rally in 14 months. The gauge has climbed about 10pc since the Fed announced a third round of stimulus on September 13. The Shanghai Composite Index rose 0.4pc in the first day of trading this year, while Brazil's Bovespa slipped 1.3pc. - Bloomberg

YHT slates Pansodan, city for danger review

By Htar Htar Khin

AMID residents' complaints over delays, the Yangon Heritage Trust (YHT) will assess a Pansodan Street building on which demolition work was halted after a media campaign have challenged statements by heritage activists.

The YHT will start the assessment of 233-235 Pansodan Street in the middle of the month, Daw Moe Moe Lwin, vice chairman of the YHT told The Myanmar Times on January 2.

On the same day, residents of the building told the YHT that the building was originally a maternity hospital, and rebuffed the organisation's claims that it has an historic connection to the Dobama Asiayone independence movement.

Residents claimed the Dobama Asiayone (We Burmans Association), which had agitated for independence from the British, had an office in the second floor of the adjoining building instead.

During the meeting with the YHT, residents gave the committee photos of safety hazards in the building and asked how they would work with the developer to reconstruct the building.

"What I want to ask is if the redevelopment will only allow the building to be constructed up to 12 storeys, and how we can figure out commercial benefit. That's the purpose of the assessment and using professional expertise in mid-January," said Daw Moe Moe Lwin.

She added that reconstruction of the building is particularly difficult because there is no general guideline for height limits on heritage sites in Yangon.

All old buildings that pose a danger to residents are also in need of a structural assessment, she said.

"Since the formation of the YHT in June, we've aimed to review all dangerous buildings in Yangon. We try to preserve buildings that are structurally safe to preserve the city's architectural character. But buildings that are a hazard to residents need to be demolished, and we try to preserve the building's original character," she said.

The YHT has made an agreement with the Yangon City Development Committee to conserve as much of a heritage building's architecture when it is demolished. However, Daw Moe Moe Lwin said this is often a challenge.

"Sometimes, a building assessment tells us little about the structural condition. Therefore, the YHT needs to consult with technical experts to reveal the actual condition of a building. If it's possible, we need to find out how to renovate the building and then reflect the original character of the building.

"But we accept that if the building is too dangerous, it must be substituted with a new one. We're worried that rebuilding might change the original architectural style of the city, so we're trying to conserve Yangon's heritage buildings through consultations with technical experts.

Profitable development means degrading the city's architectural style," she said.

Workers began demolishing the upper levels of the four-storey building at 233-235 Pansodan Street in October after it was declared a dangerous structure by the YCDC.

The four owners, whose apartments each covered a floor of the building, were evicted by the YCDC in September. The site's developer, United Construction Company, planned to build a 12-storey condominium on the site and the four owners said it had agreed to provide them with an apartment on the same level as the residence they had vacated.

During the meeting on January 2, Daw Moe Moe Lwin said United Construction Company and the building's residents seemed likely to agree on reducing the plans for redevelopment to 10 storeys.

OUE puts pressure on billionaire in F&N bid

Stephen Riady, chairman of Overseas Union Enterprise Ltd (OUE) and Lippo Ltd. Pic: Bloomberg

By Joyce Koh and Jonathan Burgos

OVERSEAS Union Enterprise Ltd put the burden back on Thailand's richest man in a bidding war for Fraser & Neave Ltd by extending the deadline for its S$13.1 billion (US$10.7 billion) offer for the Singapore property and drinks company.

OUE, headed by Executive Chairman Stephen Riady, and its partners moved the expiry date on its S$9.08 per share bid to January 14, according to a stock exchange statement on January 2. Thai billionaire Charoen Sirivadhanabhakdi's TCC Assets last week delayed the closing date on its S$8.88 per share offer until January 10.

"The ball is actually on TCC's court to improve their offer before OUE needs to react," said Jason Hughes, head of premium client management at IG Markets in Singapore.

Fraser & Neave shares have traded above both offers in a sign investors expect the takeover battle to escalate. Charoen agreed to buy a 22 percent stake in F&N in July, setting off a fight for the company's soft drink and property assets and prompting the sale of its beer unit to Heineken.

F&N shares dropped 0.1pc to close at S$9.66 on January 2.

OUE, a Singapore-based property company, has enlisted Kirin Holdings Co, Japan's largest drinks maker, in its bid. OUE would get the company's property business and Kirin would take the food and beverage unit.

Kirin has agreed to tender its 14.8pc stake in F&N, OUE has said. The Japanese brewer will offer S$2.7 billion for F&N's food and beverage business if OUE wins enough support to complete the takeover.

Fraser & Neave on December 31 said its independent financial adviser JPMorgan Chase & Co had found Kirin's offer "fair but not reasonable, from a financial point of view," partly because the Japanese brewer's bid was based on a negotiated sale rather than an auction.

"For OUE, they now need to work through how a sale of F&N's food and beverage business is going to happen as the JPMorgan report has cast uncertainty on Kirin's ability to buy those assets," said Jonathan Foster, Singapore-based director of global special situations at Religare Capital Markets. "For TCC, it's more straightforward in that they have to decide how much they are willing to pay while making sure they don't overpay."

F&N has said it had committed to pay the OUE consortium a break-up fee of as much as S$50 million if a competing offer is successful.

F&N's board has said an independent adviser has found both offers "not compelling but fair."

Charoen's unlisted business, TCC Group, has a real estate unit. His Thai Beverage Pcl, which sells the Chang brand of beer, gets almost all its revenue from its home market. Charoen, 68, has a net worth of about $8.9 billion based on current calculations from the Bloomberg Billionaires Index.

The Thai billionaire in July agreed to pay S$2.78 billion for an initial stake in F&N by acquiring the stock held by Oversea-Chinese Banking Corp and its partners. He later acquired more shares to take him near the threshold to make a bid.

Charoen's offer for F&N valued the rest of the company at about S$8.9 billion on September 13, the day TCC offered S$8.88 a share for the 69.6pc of F&N it didn't already control.

OUE Executive Chairman Stephen Riady is a son of Mochtar Riady, who controls Indonesia's Lippo Group, with businesses ranging from real estate and financial services to food across Asia. If successful, it would be the biggest ever acquisition of a Singapore-based company, according to data compiled by Bloomberg.

OUE, which gets about 65pc of its revenue from hotel operations, plans at least one investment a year in Singapore to boost property holdings that include office towers, luxury apartments and malls, Riady said in an interview in August.

Heineken won control of F&N's brewery unit, the maker of Tiger beer, in a deal that closed in November.

Govt backs mega housing projects

By Htar Htar Khin

THE Ministry of Construction's Department of Human Settlement and Housing Development (DHSHD) is planning the development of two major housing projects in Yangon's Dagon Seikkan township under a K500 billion government grant, a government official announced last week.

The Ayeyarwon development project is situated on 120 acres of land while the Yadanar development project stands on 100 acres. Both comprise 17,408 apartments and the projects are slated for completion in two to three years, said U Aung Kyaw Oo, the director of the land and tax revenue department under the DHSHD, during a press release held at Dagon Seikkan's Kanaung Hall on January 2.

"These projects are a pilot plan for all public housing projects in Myanmar. The housing projects will be 18-storeys and include lifts, water and electricity, and their own generators. Apartments will have two bedrooms, a living room and a kitchen and will be able to accommodate five household members each. In total, these two projects will be able to house over 80,000," U Aung Kyaw Oo said.

He added that providing homes to families in the area is a top priority along with building schools, hospitals and public parks to accelerate urban development. He said the project aims to improve Dagon Seikkan's population, which lies on the outskirts of Yangon.

Because the soil and bedrock at the construction site is soft due to Dagon Seikkan's proximity to the Yangon River, U Aung Kyaw Rise Building Projects, the Myanmar Engineering Society and technicians from Singapore have all been invited by the DHSHD to participate in the three-month assessment and to give further advice on structural safety.

Construction of the two edifices will begin in April following the assessment, U Aung Kyaw Oo said.

However, illegal squatters living in the area zoned for the residential development project are already hampering construction plans, U Aung Kyaw Oo said. The government has issued them a deadline to have vacated the area by January 6.

"What happened is that when we started the project in Dagon Seikkan, we allowed the labourers to live near the project site. They never go back when the [daily work] is finished and live by the site, also with their families."

"With this current project, many families are squatting on the site illegally. There are 338 squatters in the township's 61st district and 676 squatters in the 67th district," he said.

DHSHD and city authorities announced they will evict the illegal squatters living on the project site on December 31 and have since erected notice boards. If the squatters have not vacated by January 6, they will be evicted in accordance with the government's bylaws, DHSHD announced at the press conference.

'These projects are a pilot plan for all public housing projects in Myanmar.'

Oo said the construction team must give extra attention to the foundations' structural safety.

The soil testing period started in the beginning of the month and will last until March. The Committee for Quality Control of High

Afghan toys inspire giant 'dandelion' anti-mine device

EINDHOVEN, Netherlands – Childhood toys lost in a war-torn field have inspired an odd-looking invention which its young Dutch inventor hopes can help save thousands of lives and limbs in his native Afghanistan.

Decades of war, notably the 1979-89 Soviet invasion, have left the rugged Afghan countryside littered with landmines that continue to exact a merciless toll, mainly on children.

Now, in a small workshop in the industrial heart of the southern city of Eindhoven, 29-year-old Massoud Hassani screws in the last leg of an ingenious, wind-driven gadget he built to clear anti-personnel mines. He calls the device, the size of a golf buggy, a "mine kafon".

"The idea comes from our childhood toys which we once played with as kids on the outskirts of Kabul," Hassani told AFP as he rolled out the device for a demonstration.

Short for "kafondan", which in Hassani's native Dari language means "something that explodes", the kafon consists of 150 bamboo legs screwed into a central metal ball.

At the other end of each leg, a round, white plastic disk the size of a small frisbee is attached via a black rubber car part for drive shafts, called a CV-joint boot.

Assembled, the spherical kafon looks like a giant tumbleweed or seed head. And like the dandelion puff it moves with the wind: the kafon is designed to be blown around, exploding anti-personnel mines as it rolls on the ground.

With the legs made from bamboo, they are easily replaceable. Once they are blown off it's simply a matter of screwing on others, which means the kafon can be used over and over.

Inside the steel ball, a GPS device plots the kafon's path as it rolls through an area that may be mined and shows on a computerised map exactly where it is safe to walk.

Hassani is still in the testing stages, notably to make sure there is 100 percent contact between the kafon's "feet" and the ground, so no mine is missed.

But initial trials -- some using explosives with the Dutch Defence Force -- and an in-the-field rolling test in Morocco this year showed promising results.

"We know this is a working prototype and that we need to do lots of testing still," said Hassani, saying the kafon would not be deployed in real situations until it was 100-percent proven.

The designer and his brother Mahmud, 27, are now looking for sponsors, notably through an online platform. They hope to raise 123,000 euros (US$160,000) in donations by next month to fund development and take the device to Afghanistan in August for more trials.

Dutch brothers of Afghan origin Massoud (R) and Mahmud Hassani (L behind round structure) push the 'mine kafon', a wind-driven gadget to clear anti-personnel mines, at their Eindhoven workshop. Pic: AFP they were accepted as refugees and today hold Dutch citizenship.

Massoud landed a place at the Design Academy Eindhoven --

"I went back into my childhood in a dream. I saw the toys we made and how they rolled into a minefield," he told AFP. "We could

'A GPS device plots the kafon's path as it rolls through an area that may be mined and shows on a computerised map exactly where it is safe to walk'

It will be the brothers' first time home after fleeing Taliban-ruled Kabul, Massoud first in 1998 then Mahmud two years later, in arduous treks through Pakistan and Uzbekistan. They finally made their way to the Netherlands, where regarded as one of the world's foremost industrial design schools -- where he first conceived the project in 2010.

"I had to design a toy from my childhood," said the shaggy-haired inventor as he sipped a cup of tea.

never get them back."

Despite huge progress in mine-clearing in Afghanistan in recent years, it remains one of the most-mined countries in the world.

Since 1989, around 650,000 anti-personnel mines, 27,000 anti-tank mines and more than 15 million other pieces of unexploded ordnance have been collected, according to the UN-funded Mine Action Coordination Centre of Afghanistan (MACCA).

In June this year, the UN said there were still 5,233 "danger zones" covering 588 square kilometres (227 square miles) putting more than 750,000 people at risk.

At least 812 people were wounded or killed last year by mines, victim-triggered improvised explosive devices and other ordnance left over from the Afghan wars, Nobel Peace Prize-winning organisation Handicap International said.

More than half of the victims were children, it said.

"People are killed almost daily in my home country -- and tragically it's often kids, like what happened on Monday," said Hassani, eyes clouded with painful memories from his own childhood.

His reference was to a December 17 tragedy when 10 Afghan girls collecting firewood were blown apart in the country's east after one accidentally struck a mine with an axe.

"There is no silver bullet to solve all the problems associated with mine clearing," conceded Mary Wareham, a senior advisor at Human Rights Watch Arms Division. But "we appreciate every effort," including the kafon's invention, she told AFP.

For Hassani, his gadget is more than just a new way to fight a deadly scourge.

"This," he said, "will be our revenge on the war that has torn up our country." -- AFP

German minister says 'never again' to nuclear power

BERLIN -- German Environment Minister Peter Altmaier said Friday his country would never again return to nuclear energy, hitting back at a top EU official who doubted Berlin's commitment to phase out nuclear power.

"I cannot see any plausible political line-up that would enable a revival of nuclear power in Germany," Altmaier told Friday's edition of the Leipzig Volkszeitung regional daily.

After the 2011 Fukushima disaster in Japan, Germany embarked on an ambitious "energy revolution", deciding to phase out its nuclear power plants by the end of 2022 and bolster renewable sources of energy such as solar and wind power.

However, concerns have mounted that this would entail a sharp rise in electricity prices amid difficulties in building a network able to transmit energy from the North Sea coast to the energy-hungry south of the country.

The European Union's Energy Commissioner, Guenther Oettinger, told Monday's edition of the Rheinische Post regional daily that there would "still be nuclear power on the German network in 40 years."

He said there were still 140 nuclear power stations in Europe and that nuclear fusion technology was progressing rapidly. "Maybe this technology will one day be accepted in Germany," said Oettinger, himself German.

Altmaier also vowed to find a permanent national storage site for nuclear waste by 2030. "We are together looking country-wide," he said, adding that the search would be accelerated in the coming years.

The search would be "co-financed and jointly carried out" by Germany's nuclear energy companies, he said. -- AFP

Delhi gang-rape victim's boyfriend speaks

NEW DELHI The boyfriend of a young Indian student whose gang-rape and murder sparked nationwide fury has recounted the savagery inflicted on her and his own trauma over his failed efforts to fend off the rapists.

The 28-year-old man, who suffered a fractured leg and other injuries in the December 16 attack, also deplored the apathy of police and passers-by who did little to help the unclothed victim at the end of their nearly hour-long ordeal.

On Saturday, a Delhi district court is expected to start the process of bringing the five adult suspects to trial, where they could face the death penalty if convicted. A sixth suspect is a minor believed to be aged 17.

"What can I say? The cruelty I saw should not be seen ever," said the boyfriend, who is currently with his family in rural northern India where he is taking time out from his job at a software firm in New Delhi.

"I tried to fight against the men but later I begged them again and again to leave her," the boyfriend told AFP in an interview by phone on Friday from Gorakhpur, a town in the state of Uttar Pradesh.

The couple had been out to watch a movie that night and decided to get into a private bus when several rickshaws had refused to drive them back to the victim's home in a New Delhi suburb.

Once in the bus, he was attacked and his 23-year-old girlfriend was gang-raped by a group of allegedly drunk men, including the driver, who also violated her with an iron bar causing immense internal damage that would lead to her death last weekend.

'I cannot tell you what I feel when I think of it. I shiver in pain'

The boyfriend, who asked not to be named, also recounted how passersby had failed to come to their rescue after they were thrown out of the moving vehicle at the end of the brutal ordeal.

He was critical of police for failing to be sensitive to his and his girlfriend's mental condition and also raised questions about the emergency care given in the public hospital where she was admitted.

"A passerby found us

Indian students of various organisations hold placards as they shout slogans during a demonstration in Hyderabad on January 3, 2013. Pic: AFP

(after the attack), but he did not even give my friend his jacket. We waited for the police to come and save us," he told AFP.

Later Friday, he appeared for the first time in public since the attack, giving an anguished interview to Hindi-language Indian cable channel Zee News.

The police arrested six suspects soon after the crime and formally charged them with murder, rape and kidnapping in a city court on Thursday.

This court is to hold another hearing on Saturday and is expected to transfer the case to a special "fast-track" court set up amid a public outcry and demands from demonstrators and the victim's family for the culprits to be hanged.

"I was not very confident about getting into the bus but my friend was running late, so we got into it. This was the biggest mistake I made and after that everything went out of control."

The driver of the bus allegedly then made lewd remarks and his accomplices joined him "to taunt" the couple.

The boyfriend told the driver to stop the bus, but by then his accomplices had locked the two doors.

"They hit me with a small stick and dragged my friend to a seat near the driver's cabin."

After that the "driver and the other men raped my friend and hit her in the worst possible ways in the most private parts of her body."

"I cannot tell you what I feel when I think of it. I shiver in pain," he said.

He said the police who came to their rescue took his girlfriend to a government hospital, but failed to take into account his injuries and mental trauma.

"I was treated like an object by the police. ... They wanted all the help to solve the case even before getting me the right treatment. Nobody witnessed the trauma I suffered," he said.

He said he was also "not satisfied by the treatment provided to the victim by the doctors" at the Safdarjung Hospital, a government-run institution.

His girlfriend died on December 29 in a specialist hospital in Singapore after a 13-day struggle to survive injuries so grievous that her intestines had to be removed. - AFP

Argentina restates Falklands claim

LONDON - Argentine President Cristina Kirchner published an open letter in the British press on Thursday calling on Prime Minister David Cameron to return the disputed

Argentine President Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner in April 2012. Pic: AFP

Falkland Islands.

In the letter, published as an advert in several national newspapers, Kirchner said the South Atlantic islands were "forcibly stripped" from Argentina 180 years ago today "in a blatant exercise of 19th-century colonialism".

"Since then, Britain, the colonial power, has refused to return the territories to the Argentine Republic, thus preventing it from restoring its territorial integrity," she wrote.

Kirchner said the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution in 1965 which considered the islands as a case of colonialism and invited Britain and Argentina to hold talks on their disputed claims.

"In the name of the Argentine people, I reiterate our invitation for us to abide by the resolutions of the United Nations," she wrote, copying in UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon.

The demand comes at the start of a year when the Falkland Islanders are due to hold a referendum on the archipelago's political status in a bid to bring the bitter territorial dispute to an end.

Tensions between Britain and Argentina rose last year on the 30th anniversary of their short but bloody war for control, which left 255 British soldiers and 649 Argentine troops dead.

Cameron has refused to discuss the issue of sovereignty of the islands, known as Las Malvinas in Spanish, and the two leaders publicly clashed over the issue at the G20 summit last June in Mexico.

In a Christmas message to the Falklands, the British prime minister accused Argentina of denying the 3,000 residents the right to choose how they are governed, and of undermining their economy.

In her letter, Kirchner accuses Britain of expelling the Argentines on the islands when it took control and beginning a "population implantation process similar to that applied to other territories under colonial rule". - AFP

Thailand ‘loses rank of world’s top rice exporter’

BANGKOK – Thailand lost its status as the world’s top rice exporter in 2012 as a controversial scheme to boost farmer incomes saw it overtaken by India and Vietnam, an industry group said Friday.

Thailand exported 6.9 million tonnes of rice last year, falling behind India which shipped 9.5 million tonnes and Vietnam which sold 7.8 million tonnes overseas, according to the Thai Rice Exporters Association.

Thai exports slumped 35 percent from the 2011 level of about 10.6 million tonnes, based on the group’s figures.

“We had been the champion since 1980, for 31 years, but we lost the top spot in 2012,” the group’s honorary president Chookiat Ophaswongse told AFP.

He said the figures from the rival exporters were based on data from Vietnam’s rice industry and the US Department of Agriculture (USDA).

Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra’s more than one-year-old policy to buy rice from farmers for 50 percent more than the market price, while popular with the rural poor has hit the competitiveness of Thai exports.

“Now Thai rice is $130-150 per tonne more expensive than our competitors. That’s why our exports have fallen as no customer can buy from us,” said Chookiat.

“Exporters should change their jobs because they can’t survive. Rice has become a political issue now,” he said.

The kingdom produces about 20 million tonnes of the grain annually on average, about half of which was sold overseas in the past.

Chookiat estimated that Thailand now has about 12-13 million tonnes of stock in storage and predicted that by the third quarter of 2013 this rice mountain will have grown to about 20 million tonnes.

While the scheme is putting strains on Thailand’s government finances, it has been welcomed by many farmers, whose support helped sweep Yingluck to a landslide election victory last year.

Her older brother Thaksin Shinawatra, who was ousted as prime minister by royalist generals in a coup in 2006, is hugely popular in rural Thailand thanks to his populist policies while in power.

The government has said it is confident that it can find buyers for its rice on world markets at a price that will raise the living standards of its farmers. It says it has signed deals to sell rice directly to other countries. – AFP

This screen grab taken from North Korean TV on January 3, 2013 shows North Korea’s young leader Kim Jong-Un and his wife Ri Sol-Ju.

An heir for North Korea’s Kim Jong-Un?

SEOUL - North Korea’s next dynastic succession may have been secured, with new TV images of leader Kim Jong-Un’s wife suggesting that Pyongyang’s first lady recently gave birth.

When state TV showed Ri Sol-Ju attending a memorial service for her husband’s late father Kim Jong-Il in mid-December, she appeared heavily pregnant with her loose-fit traditional dress barely hiding a swollen belly.

But more recent images of her attending an official New Year’s party showed her wearing a well-fitted two-piece skirt suit with no physical sign of pregnancy.

Speculation was fuelled by the official performance, which included an all-woman band singing a version of the Christmas favourite “When a Child is Born” made popular by Johnny Mathis.

South Korean television and newspapers on Thursday ran before-and-after photos with speculative captions.

“The bulging stomach has gone down ... has Ri Sol-Ju given birth?” asked the Dong-A Ilbo daily.

“Ri Sol-Ju with her tummy reduced in 11 days. Has she come out right after childbirth?” ran the caption in the Chosun Ilbo daily.

A South Korean government official, quoted by Yonhap news agency, said Ri “appeared to have already given birth, based on analysis of the TV images.”

The fact that Kim Jong-Un even had a wife was only revealed in July last year when pictures emerged of a stylishly-dressed young woman accompanying the new young leader at official events.

Pyongyang’s state media confirmed her identity later in the same month, in a rare move in the isolated and deeply patriarchal nation, which has rarely placed its first ladies under the spotlight.

According to intelligence reports cited by the South Korean media, the couple were married in 2009 and already have one child, although that has never been confirmed.

Ri was described as coming from an ordinary family, with her father an academic and her mother a doctor. She visited South Korea in 2005 as a cheerleader for her country’s squad in the Asian Athletics Championships. – AFP

Thousands flee wildfires in Australia

SYDNEY – Thousands fled wildfires raging on the Australian island of Tasmania, destroying at least 80 properties and leaving unconfirmed reports of one man dying in the blaze, police said Saturday.

The fires flared on Friday as much of the country suffered a summer heatwave which pushed temperatures above 40 Celsius (104 Fahrenheit) in Tasmania, a southern island state known for its cooler climate.

One of the worst affected areas was the small community of Dunalley, some 55 kilometres (34 miles) east of Hobart, where police estimate about 30 percent of buildings have been destroyed, including the police station and school.

In nearby Connelly’s Marsh, about 40 percent of buildings have been ruined.

Police said a firefighting crew was trapped by a bushfire on Friday at Dunalley, where there are fears that a man may have died in the blaze.

“They had to take shelter in their vehicle as the fire burned over their vehicle and they were, from that location as I understand it, able to see a gentlemen who was trying to protect his property and they couldn’t get to him, it was too unsafe,” acting Police Commissioner Scott Tilyard said.

Dunalley resident Tony Young told the Australian Broadcasting Corporation he realised the seriousness of the wildfires when he spotted plumes of smoke and a helicopter overhead.

“I’d no sooner said that than the embers came straight into the garage where I was standing and ignited the ceiling in the shed and just engulfed it,” he told the broadcaster.

“So all I could do was drive the car out of the shed, drive across the other side of the road and stand back and look at the whole place just being engulfed in flames, just like a movie.”

Further south on the Tasman Peninsula east of Hobart, as many as 2,000 people had taken refuge in the town of Nubeena overnight, while another 700 were sheltering at the nearby historic Port Arthur site.

Others have been ferried to emergency accommodation in Hobart.

“At this stage, there are no confirmed reports of deaths or major injuries resulting from the fires throughout the state,” Tasmania Police said in a statement.

Authorities said while temperatures had dropped from Friday’s peak of 41.8 Celsius, the fire danger had yet to pass, with several bushfires burning out of control on Saturday in the east and west of the state. – AFP

As Chavez fights cancer, aides build myth

CARACAS—As Hugo Chavez battles cancer in Cuba, his lieutenants here are actively glorifying Venezuela's firebrand leader in what observers see as a campaign to erect a heroic myth that can survive his death.

Since leaving Caracas for Cuba more than three weeks ago for his fourth and riskiest round of cancer surgery so far, the larger-than-life leftist Chavez has vanished from view for the longest stretch of his 14-year presidency.

Even so, his image has been ever present across the state-run media, in adoring new documentaries about his life and legacy and older video clips that lionize the "comandante."

Some highlight "Chavez's battles" with the imperialist enemy. Others evoke his closeness with Cuban leader Fidel Castro or trace his political lineage to independence hero Simon Bolivar, the father of the country.

The regime "exalts Chavez and his accomplishments because it seems clear that his absence could become permanent," said Luis Alberto Butto, a researcher at Simon Bolivar University.

"It can be seen in the both the volume and the tone" of the messages, said Butto, a historian and political analyst.

With sheer force of personality, Chavez has dominated Venezuela like few others in the country's history, overturning entrenched elites and bending its political system to his populist vision of "21st century socialism."

An artist draws next to a painting of Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez in Caracas, on January 3, 2013. Pic: AFP

But with so much revolving around Chavez personally, it remains to be seen whether anyone else in his camp has the political skills and popular appeal to replace him.

Chavez has brooked no rivals and even when he named Vice President Nicolas Maduro last month as his successor and left him in charge of the country he did so without transferring the formal powers of office.

Debates that have multiplied on radio and television since the Venezuelan leader's departure for Cuba on December 10 have been devoted almost exclusively to him, rather than any potential successors.

Rebroadcast 24 hours a day, they are interspersed with news updates and music clips that glorify, if not deify, the ailing president.

On some radio broadcasts, listeners recite prayers and poetry dedicated to him.

A new propaganda spot shows photographs of an adolescent Chavez against a background of clouds as solemn music plays, followed by pictures of the president hugging children and old people.

It finishes with an image of the leader in apparently contemplative mood in pouring rain and the slogan:

"I am Chavez."

Underlying the barrage of imagery is a message that appears to be shifting from "Never without Chavez" to "Never without Chavismo."

Billboards and wall posters displaying giant images of citizens with the slogan "I am Chavez" or "the people are Chavez" also reinforce the idea that Chavismo will survive without its charismatic leader.

In a recent video clip, Chavez himself claimed: "I am not an individual, I am the people, damn it!"

But Butto said that represents a challenge for "Chavismo".

"It seems likely there will be no return, so the language has changed," he said.

"Today they exalt the figure of Chavez to establish a link between the president, his legacy and the future of his political project. The problem is that Chavez is the project."

Teresa Albanes, an advisor of the main opposition coalition, likened it to the personality cult that arose in Argentina around Juan Domingo Peron and his wife Evita.

"What the Chavistas want to say is that Chavismo will not end with Chavez," she said.

Top Chavez lieutenants like Vice President Maduro and National Assembly speaker Diosdado Cabello on several occasions said they would continue the Bolivarian revolution, no matter what the cost.

Often described as a populist movement by its detractors, Chavez's revolution has consisted mainly of redistributing oil revenues to the have-nots through a series of social programs.

The Venezuelan people have "the education, the political culture and the levels of organization to pursue this revolution at least until the end of the century," Maduro said from Cuba on Tuesday. — AFP

Syrian civil war death toll reaches 60,000

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — At least 60,000 people have been killed in Syria since protests against President Bashar Assad began nearly two years ago, the United Nations said Wednesday in its first detailed analysis of deaths.

"The number of casualties is much higher than we expected, and is truly shocking," UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Navi Pillay said in a statement emailed from Geneva. "Collectively, we have fiddled at the edges while Syria burns."

The casualty toll released by the U.N. integrates six databases of killings between March 2011 and November 2012 maintained by Syrian human rights monitors and one built by the government. Only reports bearing full names and the date and location of each death were used, according to the U.N. The seven databases identified 59,648 unique killings and Pillay said it's now reasonable to assume more than 60,000 have died.

The conflict began with peaceful protests 22 months ago and then spiralled toward what U.N. special envoy Lakhdar Brahimi this week warned may "turn into hell." The fighting has affected the lives of 3.3 million Syrians and caused damage totaling 2 trillion Syrian pounds ($28 billion), Prime Minister Wael al-Halaqi said on state television on Dec. 31.

The analysis shows a rise in the average number of documented deaths to 5,000 a month since July 2012, from around 1,000 a month previously.

The greatest number of reported killings was in Homs where 12,560 deaths were recorded, followed by 10,862 in rural Damascus, 7,686 in Idlib and 6,188 in Aleppo, according to the report. The analysis, by the non-profit technology company Benetech for the U.N., was not able to differentiate clearly between combatants and non-combatants.

The report will be used to assist future war crimes investigations, the U.N. said, and will assist "to enhance accountability and provide justice and reparations to victims' families."

At least 20 people died today when warplanes struck a gas station in the Damascus suburb of Mleeha, Omar Hamza, an opposition spokesman told Al Arabiya television. The attack killed 50 and wounded dozens more, according to the opposition Local Coordination Committees in an e-mailed statement. The number of dead is likely to rise as rescuers continue to pull human remains from the rubble, the LCC said.

"The situation is bad and it's getting worse," Brahimi said in Cairo on Dec. 30. "I can't see anything other than these two paths: Either there will be a political solution that will meet the ambitions and legitimate rights of the Syrian people, or Syria will turn into hell."

Australia warns citizens against fighting in Syria

SYDNEY—Australians who take part in the fighting in Syria face up to 20 years in jail, a spokesman for Foreign Minister Bob Carr said Friday after a Melbourne man was reportedly killed in the conflict.

The spokesman said the government was aware of reports that more than 100 Australians had engaged in the conflict since 2011 but he had "no evidence" of any citizens currently involved.

Under the Crimes (Foreign Incursions and Recruitment) Act 1978: "A person shall not enter a foreign state with intent to engage in a hostile activity... or engage in a hostile activity in a foreign state."

"Penalty (is) imprisonment for 20 years," the spokesman said.

"Anyone in Australia who recruits someone to fight overseas faces seven years."

At least three Australians are reported to have died in Syria, including a Melbourne bricklayer reportedly travelling under the name Abu al-Walid al-Australi and killed last weekend fighting alongside rebels.

Australian Arabic Council founder Joseph Wakim said many people travelling to Syria claimed they were providing humanitarian support to the war-torn nation but were instead involved in the fighting.

"I do believe that for most of these people it is far more a decision of personal conviction than it is of some sort of financial gain," he told the Australian Broadcasting Corporation.

He has called for greater vigilance over people travelling to the country.

But Carr said it was very difficult to keep track of people's movements in Syria.

"It's a country on the verge of collapse and internal communications are extremely poor," Carr told the ABC.

"We know... that it is a matter of militia against militia; that local militia control parts of the country and our capacity to know what individual Australians might be doing inside Syria is, of course, extremely limited."

Australia has been deeply critical of the regime of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad and has urged all its citizens to leave Syria, but there are 67 left in the country, mostly dual-nationals who are long-term residents. — AFP

Clinton out of hospital

NEW YORK – US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton left a New York hospital late Wednesday after three days of treatment and is expected to make a full recovery from a rare blood clot in her head.

"Secretary Clinton was discharged from the hospital this evening," a top aide, Deputy Assistant Secretary Philippe Reines, said in a statement, after the 65-year-old diplomat was forced to spend New Year's Eve in a hospital bed.

"Her medical team advised her that she is making good progress on all fronts, and they are confident she will make a full recovery," he said, adding that Clinton was "eager to get back to the office."

Earlier the top US diplomat, bundled up against the cold in a thick winter coat and wearing dark glasses, appeared in public for the first time in almost a month, when she came out of a building at the New York Presbyterian Hospital.

It was the first time Clinton had been seen since catching a stomach virus on returning from a trip to Europe on December 7, which triggered a series of health scares, forcing doctors to order her to rest.

Accompanied by her smiling husband, former president Bill Clinton, as well as her daughter Chelsea and several aides, Clinton walked to a waiting black van at the hospital, according to images broadcast by CNN.

Both Clinton and her family "would like to express their appreciation for the excellent care she received from the doctors, nurses and staff at New York Presbyterian Hospital Columbia University Medical Center," Reines added.

He did not say when the secretary would return to work though, promising only to issue an update in the coming days. He did not specify where Clinton was going, but she has a home in Chappaqua, New York.

"Grateful my Mom discharged from the hospital & is heading home. Even more grateful her medical team confident she'll make a full recovery," Chelsea Clinton said in a tweet.

The health scare, which has grounded the normally indefatigable secretary of state, came as she prepares to step down after four years in office later this month.

She will most likely hand the baton to Senator John Kerry, who has been nominated by President Barack Obama to replace her.

Kerry's appointment will have to be confirmed by the new Senate, due to be sworn in on Thursday, but as a veteran, well-respected senator, he is expected to sail through his confirmation hearing.

Clinton has been largely credited with helping to restore America's image abroad in the past four years, and Obama has said that he had begged her to stay on.

But the former first lady and senator has admitted to being exhausted after being in the public eye for almost two decades. As secretary of state she has flown almost a million miles and visited 112 countries, tirelessly promoting democracy and what she calls "smart power."

Earlier, State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland said that despite her illness Clinton had been busy keeping in touch by telephone.

"She has been talking to her staff, including today. She's been quite active on the phone with all of us," Nuland told journalists.

The globe-trotting diplomat was admitted to the hospital on Sunday after a routine scan revealed the clot in a vein behind her right ear in the space between her skull and her brain.

Her doctors Lisa Bardack, from the Mount Kisco Medical Group, and Gigi El-Bayoumi, of George Washington University, said in a statement on Monday that Clinton had not suffered a stroke or any neurological damage.

They said however they would be treating Clinton with blood thinners to break up the clot, which if left untreated could be potentially dangerous.

The blood clot is believed to have stemmed from a concussion, which happened when Clinton became dehydrated as a result of the stomach bug and fainted.

Clinton still has some unfinished business as she wraps up her tenure at the State Department, and is widely expected to testify before the end of the month on the September 11 attack on a diplomatic mission in Libya.

She had been due to appear at hearings last month, after a State Department inquiry found security at the Benghazi mission was "grossly inadequate," but was forced to cancel after she fell ill. Four Americans died in the attack.

Republican Representative Peter King said he believed she still needed to testify "and I think she will be pleased to do it. I never have known Hillary Clinton to back away from a fight."

But King told CNN she should not appear before Congress "until she is absolutely in perfect health." – AFP

Virgin France latest victim of digital sales

PARIS – Entertainment retailer Virgin France has become the latest victim of consumers shifting to buying digital music and video, with a spokesman saying on Friday that the company is to declare itself insolvent.

The seller of CDs and DVDs employs 1,000 workers and operates 26 stores in France, including its flagship Virgin Megastore on the Avenue des Champs Elysees in Paris.

The company is to hold a works council meeting with employees on Monday to announce the insolvency, the spokesman said.

"The company has seen losses for several years," the spokesman said, noting that sales were at 286 million euros ($372 million) in 2011.

Virgin France has already taken steps to terminate its lease on its landmark location on the Champs Elysees, which accounts for 20 percent of its sales.

French media reports have suggested tech firm Apple or British retailer Marks & Spencer could be looking to take over the prime location on the famed Parisian shopping strip.

French investment firm Butler Capital Partners owns 74 percent of Virgin France after buying a controlling stake from media conglomerate Lagardere in 2007.

Lagardere purchased the company from British businessman Richard Branson's Virgin Group in 2001.

Virgin France has closed several outlets and shed 200 employees in recent years.

A new management team took over in mid-2012 in a bid to rework the company's strategy.

"This is absolutely terrible news," the head of France's MEDEF employers group, Laurence Parisot, said on BFM Television.

"The crisis we are going through is not only an economic crisis," she said. "A new (business) model is being born and many sectors are being affected."

Unions representing Virgin France employees said the move was not unexpected and criticised the company's owners for not investing more and management for failing to come up with a reorganisation plan.

The head of France's CFDT union, Laurent Berger, said Virgin France had failed to adapt to the changing retail environment.

"Every sector is at some point confronted with economic difficulties," he said on France Inter radio. "Virgin did not at any point make the necessary changes in terms of economic strategy."

Another major French media retailer, FNAC, is also suffering and last year announced an 80-million-euro savings plan and the cutting of 500 jobs.

Large music, video and books retailers have struggled around the world to survive the onset of digital distribution of media.

British entertainment group HMV warned last month there was uncertainty about its future after it announced half-year losses of £36 million (44 million euros, $58 million). – AFP

Steve Jobs movie

SAN FRANCISCO – The first film based on the life of legendary Apple co-founder Steve Jobs will be released in April, according to a distribution deal for "JOBS" announced on Thursday.

The "biopic" starring Ashton Kutcher as Jobs, who died in 2011, will premier later this month on the closing night of the Sundance Film Festival, according to independent distributor Open Road Films.

Written by Matthew Whitely and directed by Joshua Michael Stern, "JOBS" focuses on the Apple co-founder's life from 1971 through 2000.

A deal was announced for the film to be distributed in North America by Open Road, which is owned by major cinema chains AMC Entertainment and Regal Entertainment.

Sony Pictures is backing a its own Jobs film based on the biography of the Apple co-founder's life written by Walter Isaacson.

The screenplay is being written by Oscar winner Aaron Sorkin, whose works include "The Social Network," a play on the birth of Facebook. – AFP

Cyclone hits New Caledonia

NOUMEA – One man was killed and another was missing after Cyclone Freda hit New Caledonia, as landslides blocked roads and high winds downed power lines, officials in the French Pacific territory said Thursday.

Wind gusts had weakened to 90 kilometres per hour (60 miles per hour) as it moved towards the east Caledonian island of Mare, after hitting the Solomon Islands earlier this week as a destructive storm with gusts reaching 231 kph.

High commissioner Albert Dupuy told reporters in the capital Noumea that one man had drowned in high seas whipped up by Freda, while an 18-year-old male was missing after attempting to cross a swollen river.

Some 3,200 people were without power, Dupuy said, adding that multiple roadways were blocked by landslides or flooding.

The storm was moving eastward at 30 kph and set to leave the New Caledonian region over the next 48 hours, officials said. – AFP

Russia-US relations turns chillier with adoption ban

WASHINGTON — Russia's move to prohibit Americans from adopting Russian orphans is the latest threat to the Obama administration's flagging attempt to "reset" relations between the two Cold War rivals.

President Vladimir Putin Friday signed a bill to ban U.S. adoptions of Russian children that the country's parliament approved in retaliation for a new U.S. law sanctioning Russians accused of human rights violations. The prohibition goes into effect Jan. 1, according to a statement e-mailed by the Kremlin.

The United States expressed "deep concerns" about the ban, with State Department spokesman Patrick Ventrell saying that more than 60,000 Russian children have been adopted by Americans in the past 20 years. The State Department reports that 962 Russian children were adopted by Americans in 2011, about one in ten U.S. international adoptions.

"It is misguided to link the fate of children to unrelated political considerations," he said in a statement Thursday. "The welfare of children is simply too important to tie to the political aspects of our relationship."

The action and reaction reflect a relationship already strained by friction over other issues, such as democracy promotion, missile defense, weapons proliferation and the conflict in Syria. While relations are much improved from the Cold War era of mutual assured destruction, they're getting frosty again with nationalist sentiment rising in Russia as the economy loses steam and the world's biggest energy exporter faces slipping oil prices.

"The reset accomplished most of its objectives, and now the question is where do you go from here?" said Angela Stent, director of the Center for Eurasian, Russian and East European Studies at Georgetown University in Washington. "That is more questionable."

Peppery rhetoric has been fueling the fire. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has called Russia's defense of Syrian President Bashar Assad "despicable", and her spokesman dismissed the country as "back in the USSR." Russia's Pravda.ru website responded by using the acronym "FUKUS" to describe its main United Nations opponents on Syria — France, the United Kingdom and the U.S.

Russia and the U.S., though, still need to work together to resolve number of dangerous issues, including Syria, North Korea, Iran's suspected nuclear weapons program, and reviving negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians. The Obama administration also hopes to work with Russia on expanding trade and U.S. investment, and would like to broker more arms control treaties, including on tactical nuclear weapons.

There's little chance that the crisis in Syria will end in anything but chaos if the U.S. and Russia — both of which worry about the rise of Islamic extremism in the country — can't find a way to cooperate on the issue, said Fiona Hill, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, a Washington policy group.

"We can't really avoid the Russians," Hill said in a telephone interview. "In the global sweep of things, we have a lot of common concerns, but we approach each issue from very different perspectives."

Some analysts tie the growing friction to Putin, who won a third term as president in March 2012 after four years as prime minister. He had been president from 2000 to 2008.

Clinton criticized Dec. 2011 elections, which increased then-Prime Minister Putin's parliamentary majority, as "neither free nor fair." Putin counterattacked by accusing her of instigating protests by giving opposition activists "a signal" to start their "active work" — an echo of the term "active measures," which described political warfare by the KGB, the Soviet intelligence service in which Putin served. — Washington Post

Israel relaxes some building restrictions on Gaza

JERUSALEM — After more than five weeks of calm on its border with Gaza, Israel is allowing more building materials into the territory and considering easing other restrictions as part of an Egypt-brokered cease-fire with Hamas that ended an eight-day conflict in November, according to Israeli and Palestinian officials.

Daily shipments of 20 truckloads of gravel for private construction began Sunday, the first such shipments since Hamas, the militant Islamist group that rules the Gaza Strip, seized control of the enclave in 2007.

Previously, building supplies from Israel were allowed in only for Israeli-approved projects carried out by international organizations, such as the United Nations and the US Agency for International Development. Israel had imposed the restrictions because of concerns the materials could be used by Hamas to build tunnels and bunkers.

The new gravel shipments are limited and not expected to have a significant impact on private construction in Gaza. But a further easing of Israeli curbs could buttress the truce with Hamas by giving the group a stake in preventing the resumption of cross-border rocket fire, which triggered the recent Israeli offensive.

"It took some time, but eventually our government understood that the way to stabilize the situation with the Gaza Strip is by creating an interest in the other party to keep the cease-fire, and you don't do it by siege, but by allowing more prosperity," said Shlomo Brom, director of the program in Israeli-Palestinian relations at the Institute for National Security Studies in Tel Aviv.

In tandem with the move by Israel, Egypt on Saturday began allowing building supplies into Gaza for projects funded by Qatar, although that step fell short of demands by Hamas for a permanent opening of the Gaza-Egypt border crossing at Rafah for the movement of goods.

On a visit to Gaza in October, the emir of Qatar pledged $400 million for the construction of housing and a rehabilitation center and to fix major roads.

Palestinian officials and business leaders in Gaza said they have been told by Israeli officials that if the cease-fire continues to hold, Israel will further ease some border restrictions. Maj. Guy Inbar, spokesman for the Israeli Defense Ministry department that oversees Gaza border crossings, said several steps are under consideration, including allowing more building materials, expanding the volume of goods crossing into Gaza from Israel, permitting more exports from the territory and facilitating infrastructure improvements there.

"As long as quiet is maintained, the easing of restrictions for the population in Gaza will continue," Inbar said. He said the steps this week "followed our discussions with the Egyptians and against the background of the quiet that has been maintained for more than five weeks."

Egypt has been in contact with both Israel and Hamas, following up on the cease-fire agreement reached November 21.

Under that deal, Israel has relaxed the limits it had imposed on Gaza fishermen, doubling the distance they can fish off the coast to six nautical miles. It has also permitted Gaza farmers to work closer to the border fence with Israel, in an area where Israeli troops had enforced a no-go zone to prevent militant attacks.

The quantity of gravel shipments approved by Israel falls far short of Gaza's private-sector building needs, which are met with supplies smuggled in tunnels under the border with Egypt. Israel allows the passage of considerably more building supplies for the internationally funded projects, about 80 to 100 truckloads a day, according to Israeli officials.

Those international projects, however, require a lengthy bureaucratic process of Israeli approval to ensure that the materials are not used by Hamas.

Ali al-Hayek, head of the Gaza Businessmen's Association, said 20 trucks a day for private-sector building "is not enough for anyone," given the scale of construction needed in Gaza, where the recent conflict with Israel brought further destruction.

Sari Bashi, executive director of Gisha, an Israeli human rights group, said that after treating building materials as "radioactive weapons . . . the fact that Israel can overnight remove onerous restrictions on construction materials indicates they should have never been there in the first place."

Israel bars nearly all exports from the Gaza Strip to its main markets in the West Bank and Israel and allows limited shipments abroad. Israel imposed a blockade on the Gaza Strip after Hamas seized control of the territory, but it eased restrictions on the entry of goods in 2010 after a deadly Israeli commando raid on a Turkish aid flotilla headed for Gaza provoked an international outcry.

China moves cautiously on foreign media, but signals tighter web control

BEIJING—Chinese citizens were treated this year to an unaccustomed number of hard-hitting exposés and investigations detailing the private lives and corrupt financial dealings of the most senior Communist Party officials and their family members.

Most of the reports have come from what one media expert here called “the two W’s,” meaning Western media and weibo, the Chinese version of Twitter.

So far, the Chinese government’s response to this growing onslaught of negative publicity has been scattered and sometimes surprisingly restrained. The reaction reflects what many analysts called Chinese authorities’ more sophisticated strategy for handling adverse publicity, and a recognition that any overreaction might simply draw new and unwanted attention.

Bloomberg News found its website blocked in China after a June story detailing the multimillion-dollar financial holdings by family members of Xi Jinping, who became Communist Party general secretary in November and will take over as president next year. Likewise, after The New York Times reported in October on the US$2.7 billion fortune amassed by close relatives of outgoing prime minister Wen Jiabao, its website and its new Chinese-language site have been blocked here.

Other Western news organisations, such as Reuters and the Wall Street Journal, have aggressively pursued corruption and other lurid allegations against deposed former Politburo member Bo Xilai, whose wife, Gu Kailai, was convicted of murdering a British businessman.

has become endemic. It’s difficult for them to issue denials. If they target individual reporters, or take legal action, this will just draw more attention.

After The New York Times story appeared detailing the $2.7 billion amassed by Wen’s relatives, including his aging mother, son, daughter, brother and brother-in-law, lawyers claiming to represent Wen’s family sent a statement to two Hong Kong newspapers “won’t be a long-term policy. They are just temporary measures.”

Ren Jianming, a professor at Beijing University of Aeronautics and Astronautics who studies corrupt practices, agreed. During the Tiananmen Square pro-democracy protests of 1989, he said, the ideological foundations of the Communist regime were being challenged and the response was harsh. Now, he said, rampant Controlling weibo “is integral to the interests of the party,” Lam said. “It’s more serious than just embarrassing stories about the assets of some officials. . . . Once they have lost control of the dissemination of information, I think the party sees real trouble ahead.”

In the past two weeks, a torrent of editorials in the state-run media has called for tighter controls over the Internet, ostensibly to better powerful new free-speech platform and a source of uncensored news and information.

“Cleaning up the online world demands the self-discipline of Web users, but even more it demands the interventionist discipline of rule of law,” warned People’s Daily Online in an ominous December 24 editorial.

Chinese officials also appear to have upgraded the sophisticated censorship apparatus collectively known as the Great Firewall. Chinese and foreigners here who want to gain access to blocked Internet sites now commonly use virtual private networks, or VPNs, to bypass the firewall. But upgrades to the firewall have targeted VPNs and made bypassing the firewall more cumbersome.

Three of the most popular companies offering VPNs in China, Witopia, Astrill and StrongVPN, this month apologized to their customers in China for slow service, blaming China’s censors.

Astrill said in a note to its customers that it was working on a way around the new barriers, but the firewall was getting better at seeking out and blocking new VPN pathways. “It’s like a cat-and-mouse game,” the company said.

So far, no reporter for a major Western media organisation has been expelled from China for coverage of the various scandals. Melissa Chan, an American correspondent for Al Jazeera English, was expelled in May, but the Chinese government gave no reason, and hers was China’s first expulsion of a foreign journalist in 14 years.

“It’s really difficult for them to target individual reporters,” said Willy Wo-Lap Lam, a longtime analyst of Chinese politics at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. “This corruption and enrichment of families denying there were any “hidden riches” and hinting at legal action against the Times. But so far, no action has been taken.

Zhan Jiang, a media expert with the Beijing Foreign Studies University, said China’s three decades of opening up has also meant an opening to the foreign media, and authorities are gradually learning to be more cautious in their response to critical stories.

“If they expel the reporters, the punishment will be too serious, and it will become another piece of news,” Zhan said. He suggested even the current restrictions on the websites corruption being exposed is embarrassing, but is not a direct threat to the government’s power.

“To not react is much wiser than to overreact,” Ren said.

Chinese authorities appear to be aiming most of their attention at local information sources, particularly weibo.

Weibo has been instrumental lately in exposing several cases of lower-level malfeasance, including the release last month of a surreptitiously recorded sex tape involving a middle-aged Chongqing district party official and his 18-year-old mistress.

protect users’ personal data and to guard against “irresponsible rumors” and online business fraud.

On Friday, a standing committee of China’s rubber-stamp legislature approved measures that would strengthen requirements for Internet users to supply their real names, which many believe is a way to stifle debate online and make it easier for police to track down and arrest people who post sensitive items.

Media experts see the new measures as gradual steps to try to rein in what has become for many young, urban and wired Chinese a

Nepalese protests mirror Indian anger over rape

KATHMANDU – Hundreds of Nepalese campaigners protested Thursday over the alleged rape and robbery of a maid by government officials, echoing widespread anger in neighbouring India over violence against women.

Sita Rai, an assumed name used by the 21-year-old to protect her identity, says she was robbed by officials and then raped by a policeman as she returned to Kathmandu’s international airport from Saudi Arabia.

Rai was given US$1,700 in compensation by the government – $700 less than the amount she says she lost – angering demonstrators who began picketing the residence of Prime Minister Baburam Bhattarai a week ago, demanding punishment of the accused.

Around 200 human rights activists, journalists and other protesters have been holding up photographs of many other victims of rape, murders and kidnappings, accusing the government of failing to act in each case.

“The cases of violence against women came out one after another and I thought enough is enough, now is the time to act. So, I joined the protest, which was small in the beginning but is now gaining momentum,” said Ananta Koirala.

Police have since made several arrests in Rai’s case and Bhattarai has spoken of his “shame” over the government’s response to her complaint.

Mass protests in India over the gang rape last month of a 23-year-old student who subsequently died have shone a light on an alleged culture of impunity over sex attacks in its Himalayan neighbour.

Nepalese media have not always prioritised the issue of violence against women, with the gang rape by five men of a 21-year-old Buddhist nun on a bus 18 months ago receiving relatively little coverage.

The latest data compiled by the UN’s Office on Drugs and Crime show 69 complaints of rape to police in 2006 in Nepal, but the figure is likely to under-represent the problem because of the difficulty in reporting cases.

The national Women’s Commission says more than 15 percent of Nepalese women suffer some form of sexual abuse during their lifetime.

Logging ban murder in Philippines

MANILA – The Philippine government has voiced outrage at “ruthless” illegal loggers intent on defying a nationwide ban on destroying forests, following the New Year’s Day murder of an environment officer.

Two unidentified men armed with M-16 rifles shot environment department officer Alfredo Almueda in the head as he waited at a forest checkpoint to intercept a truck carrying logs on Tuesday, the government said in a statement.

“We condemn in the strongest possible terms the killing of yet another environment officer. We are angered and outraged by the attack,” Environment Secretary Ramon Paje said in the statement issued late Wednesday.

Paje said Almueda, 59, was the victim of persistent efforts by illegal loggers to silence “environmental defenders”.

“This attack clearly demonstrates the ruthlessness of those responsible for the rape and destruction of our forests,” Paje said.

Almueda’s killing brings to 21 the number of environment department personnel, deputised workers and volunteers who have been killed since a nationwide logging ban was imposed two years ago, according to government data.

The Philippines, a tropical Southeast Asian archipelago, has lost more than half its forest cover over the past century with only about 7.6 million hectares (18.8 million acres) left, Paje told reporters last year.

These forests are guarded by underfunded, outnumbered and poorly armed government personnel who often face resistance from illegal loggers often linked to powerful businessmen and corrupt officials.

Clemente Bautista, national coordinator for the non-government environmental group Kalikasan (Nature), said illegal loggers felt they could operate with impunity.

“Initially, they will be intimidated and if that does not work, (the loggers) file a case against the officials or have them removed from their post. If the officials are hard-headed they will even kill them,” he said.

Out of all the 21 murders since the start of 2011, only one suspect for one of the cases has been caught, environment department assistant secretary Danny Nicer told AFP.

Record India deficit may limit rate cuts

By Kartik Goyal

INDIA'S record current-account deficit threatens to weigh on the rupee and curb the magnitude of interest-rate cuts forecast to begin this month in support of government policies seeking faster growth.

The shortfall swelled to US$22.31 billion in the quarter ended September 30, the widest in Reserve Bank of India data beginning 1949. The rupee is down 6.1 percent against the dollar in the past three months, fanning price gains that will limit Governor Duvvuri Subbarao to a 25 basis-point rate cut on January 29, according to eight of 10 analysts in a Bloomberg News survey.

India has the biggest deficit among the largest emerging markets, stoked by the worst export slump since the 2009 global recession and gold imports that Finance Minister Palaniappan Chidambaram said are a "huge drain." Trade and budget gaps have increased economic risks, the Reserve Bank said December 28, even as the government tries to lure more foreign investment and limit subsidies as Asia's No 3 economy struggles.

"The widening current-account deficit indicates very severe macroeconomic threats," said Rupa Rege Nitsure, an economist at Bank of Baroda in Mumbai. "The central bank has less room to ease policy meaningfully."

Subbarao has left borrowing costs at 8pc since a 50 basis-point cut in April 2012, resisting Chidambaram's calls in October for a further reduction.

Still, the central bank signaled in a statement of the December 18 policy review that it may ease in 2013 as an inflation rate exceeding 7pc cools. Two analysts in the Bloomberg survey predicted a 0.5pc-point cut in January.

The rupee weakened 1.1pc, the most in two months, to 55.075 per dollar at the 5 p.m. close in Mumbai on January 4. The BSE India Sensitive Index climbed 0.1pc. Five-year interest rate swaps advanced to 7.1pc, the highest in more than a week, while the one-year rate rose as high as 7.6pc, indicating investors pared bets on the extent of cuts in borrowing costs.

Stability report last month. India also purchases about 80pc of its crude oil from overseas.

The rupee will weaken about 7pc to 59 per dollar by year-end, according to Nomura Holdings Inc Kotak Mahindra Bank Ltd predicts a drop to as low as 57 per dollar this quarter.

Outrage over Hong Kong's 'shark fin rooftop'

HONG KONG — Hong Kong conservationists expressed outrage Thursday after images of a factory rooftop covered in thousands of freshly sliced shark fins emerged, as they called for curbs on the "barbaric" trade.

The southern Chinese city is one of the world's biggest markets for shark fins, which are used to make soup that is an expensive staple at Chinese banquets and viewed by many Asians as a rare delicacy.

Activist Gary Stokes who has visited the site estimated there are 15,000 to 20,000 fins being laid to dry on the rooftop on Hong Kong island ahead of an anticipated surge in demand over Lunar New Year in February this year.

"This is shocking," the Hong Kong coordinator for conservation group Sea Shepherd told AFP, saying it was the first time that he has spotted such a massive hoarding of shark fins in one place in the Asian financial hub.

"This is the most graphic, brutal and barbaric part of the industry -- the element of chopping a shark's fin off and throw it back into the water is horrific and inhumane," he added.

Stokes believed the large amount of shark fins were destined for China, and that traders moved to dry the shark fins on secluded rooftops instead of sidewalks -- as they have done in the past -- to avoid public anger.

Campaigns against consuming shark fins have gained ground in Hong Kong in recent years, after major hotel chains decided to drop the soup from the menus, and home carrier Cathay Pacific said in September it would stop carrying unsustainable sourced shark products on its cargo flights.

"The demand in Hong Kong is definitely decreasing but unfortunately, the demand in China is growing," Stokes said.

"As long as there is no protection for the sharks, the (demand) will just keep going on and on," he added, urging Hong Kong authorities to ban the trade.

Environmentalists say the sustainable shark fin industry is tiny and most of the products are harvested in a way that threatens scores of shark species deemed vital for healthy oceans.

About 73 million sharks are killed every year, with Hong Kong importing about 10,000 tonnes annually for the past decade, according to environmental group WWF. Most of those fins are then exported to mainland China.

The number of threatened shark species has soared from 15 in 1996 to more than 180 in 2010, mainly due to the growing Chinese demand for fins. — AFP

Starbucks to enter Vietnam

HANOI – Starbucks said Thursday it would open its first store next month in Vietnam, seeking a foothold in the coffee-loving country as part of efforts to expand in Asia.

The communist country's first Starbucks cafe will be in southern Ho Chi Minh City, the US beverage giant said in a joint statement with its local partner, Hong Kong's Maxim Group.

"Vietnam is one of the most dynamic and exciting markets in the world and we are proud to add Vietnam as the 12th market across the China and Asia-Pacific region," said Starbucks China and Asia Pacific president John Culver.

Starbucks has been targeting growth outside of the stagnant US market, opening thousands of stores in China and across the Asia-Pacific region over the past few years.

In October, it opened its first stores in India, in partnership with domestic giant Tata Global Beverages.

Unlike tea-drinking India, Vietnam -- the world's second-largest coffee producer -- already has a strong local coffee culture with dozens of popular local chains and small coffee-shops on nearly every street corner.

"Starbucks is deeply respectful of Vietnam's long and distinctive local coffee culture," Culver said in the statement.

"We know coffee is a national pride for many Vietnamese and as such, we look forward to contributing and growing Vietnam's already vibrant coffee industry," he added.

Starbucks already purchases "notable" amounts of high-quality arabica coffee from Vietnam and is committed to buying more over the long-term, according to the statement.

Culver said in December that Starbucks will have almost 4,000 stores in the Asia-Pacific region by the end of 2013, including 1,000 in China. – AFP

Google chairman to visit NKorea

WASHINGTON – The United States on Thursday criticised a planned visit to North Korea by Google chairman Eric Schmidt, calling it ill-timed in the wake of Pyongyang's widely condemned rocket launch last month.

Schmidt – whose company has an unofficial motto of "Don't Be Evil" – is planning to visit the isolated nation with former New Mexico governor Bill Richardson, a veteran troubleshooter on North Korea.

Richardson has been to North Korea a number of times in the past 20 years and has been involved in negotiating the release of US citizens detained in the country.

News of the visit, described as "private" by both Washington and Seoul, comes just weeks after Pyongyang confirmed the arrest of a US citizen of Korean descent and said he would be prosecuted for unspecified crimes.

Pyongyang has in the past agreed to hand over detainees to high-profile delegations led by the likes of former US president Bill Clinton, and some observers suggested it may have requested Schmidt's participation in this case.

US State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland clearly conveyed Washington's lack of enthusiasm for the mission, and told reporters that both Schmidt and Richardson were "well aware" of that view.

"Frankly we don't think the timing of this is particularly helpful... in light of recent actions by (Pyongyang)," Nuland said, adding that she was referring to its long-range rocket launch in December.

Pyongyang defended the launch as a purely scientific mission aimed at placing a satellite in space, but the international community saw it as a disguised ballistic missile test that flagrantly violated UN resolutions.

Nuland said that Schmidt and Richardson would be travelling in an "unofficial capacity," adding: "They are not carrying any messages from us."

When asked if the pair had been told of Washington's displeasure about the timing, the spokeswoman replied: "They are well aware of our views."

Google has so far refused officially to confirm the visit. Richardson's staff told AFP he would be out of the United States until Friday and unavailable for comment.

Richardson was last in Pyongyang in 2010 when he met North Korea's chief nuclear negotiator in an attempt to ease tensions after the North shelled a South Korean border island.

The US citizen arrested in November, identified as Pae Jun-Ho, entered the country as a tourist according to North Korea's official Korean Central News Agency (KCNA) which said he had admitted committing a crime against the state.

North Koreans are largely isolated from external news and information sources and very few citizens have access to a computer, let alone the Internet.

Google is present in neighboring China, where it has long struggled with government censors. In 2010 it effectively shut down its Chinese search engine, re-routing mainland users to its uncensored site in Hong Kong.

Its great famine now just a memory, China confronts a new problem: obesity Older people in China remember the Great Famine of 1958-61, when 15 million to 45 million people died of hunger and related causes.

Today, nearly every street corner in Beijing and many other cities seems to boast a McDonald's. There are KFC outlets in almost every Chinese city, 3,700 in all. Meanwhile, newly minted members of the Chinese middle class have rushed to buy cars, leaving bicycles that were once a major source of exercise rusting on the street. Pizza Hut is considered a fancy date-night restaurant, T.G.I. Friday's has several branches in Beijing, and cans of Coca-Cola are sold at every corner stand.

With fast food and rising affluence, a country only a generation removed from hunger is getting fat. How fat? According to the World Health Organisation, the percentage of adults who are overweight and obese rose from 25 percent in 2002 to 38.5pc in 2010 in a population of 1.37 billion. Urban dwellers account for much of this. WHO projects that 50 to 57pc of the Chinese population will be too heavy by 2015. (By comparison, 69pc of Americans age 20 and older are overweight or obese.)

There's a standing joke, notes Lyn Wren, a physician with International SOS Beijing Clinic, that "Chinese waistlines are growing faster than the GDP."

Given how impoverished the country was not long ago and how impoverished parts of it still are, "having a problem where people are eating too much — it can seem a little churlish to complain about that," says Paul French, the Shanghai-based author of "Fat China: How Expanding Waistlines are Changing a Nation." French and co-author Matthew Crabbe found that even as recently as five years ago, obesity wasn't recognized as a problem by health professionals in China.

The Chinese Health Ministry has said it encourages healthy eating programs in schools and the construction of more playgrounds to promote exercise. And the Chinese Center for Disease Control and Prevention makes vague references to "health promotion" and providing "scientific guidance for healthy diets," but nationwide campaigns about eating healthily and exercising are not evident. In fact, pushing the population to lose weight, exercise and cut back on unhealthy foods seems to strike a discordant note to some inside the government, French says. "When I talked to government officials, their argument was: Right now we're trying to tell them to do and not do a lot of things," such as not spitting on the street, not dropping trash everywhere and not driving "like complete idiots."

"They know they can only tell people to do some things . . . before they get fed up."

Although the era of famine is long past, many grandparents and parents still push their children to eat a lot. Setsuko Hosoda, a family doctor at Beijing United Family Hospital, says the parents and grandparents she sees are "always worried that their child is not eating enough." A 2012 Penn State study of 176 Chinese children ages 6 to 18 found that 72 percent of mothers of overweight children thought their children were normal or underweight.

Sissi Zhong, a 26-year-old Beijing secretary, recalls that her grandparents got angry if she left food on her plate when she was a child. "They said, 'Do you know, in my time of food shortages, people didn't have food, so how can you waste your food?'" Zhong says. So she cleaned her plate even if she was very full.

When her father came home

'Chinese waistlines are growing faster than the GDP' exercising are not evident.

In fact, pushing the population to lose weight, exercise and cut back on unhealthy foods seems to strike a discordant note to some inside the government, French says. "When I talked to government officials, their argument was: Right now we're trying to tell them to do and not do a lot of things," such as not spitting on the street, not dropping trash everywhere and not driving "like complete idiots."

"They know they can only tell people to do some things . . . before they get fed up."

Although the era of famine is long past, many grandparents and parents still push their children to eat a lot.

Setsuko Hosoda, a family doctor at Beijing United Family Hospital, says the parents and from business trips with boxes of a Chinese soft drink called Jianlibao, she started to put on weight. Drinking four and five cans a day made her weight jump to 143 pounds by the time she was 18. At 5-foot-3, that would put her barely into the "overweight" category by US standards, but she was miserable, getting kicked off her school's dance team for being too fat and being teased by boys who liked her skinnier pals. Today, Zhong says she spends many hours at the gym to stay slim.

China has particular problems, French says, that can promote obesity. A survey he did found that recent scares about contaminated milk, fruit and vegetables have made consumers feel more safe buying and eating packaged foods. "It's perceived to be less tainted," he says. "If it's packaged and done by Nestle, they're thinking and hoping that there is not going to be poison" in the food. Yet, the fat and sugar content of many packaged foods is often much higher than that of fresh food.

Contradictory impulses are apparent here, much as in the United States. Chinese editions of Vogue display models who are bone-thin.

At the same time, China seems oddly fascinated by obesity. Two years ago, a shopping mall in the city of Shenyang held an obesity competition to celebrate International Women's Day.

Chinese are turning to surgical solutions for weight loss. Huiqi Yang, a general surgeon at Beijing United Family Hospital, has just started offering an operation in which an adjustable band is surgically tied around the stomach to constrict it, leading patients to eat less. Chinese doctors have been doing such bariatric surgeries for 15 years, but Yang says there is growing interest.

Meanwhile, as obesity, rises so do the ills associated with it.

A recent World Bank report said diabetes, heart disease and hypertension are among several noncommunicable diseases threatening China and other countries. The International Diabetes Federation estimates that there are 92.3 million diabetics in China. No other country has as many diabetics — not surprising, given that China is the most populous country in the world — and even China's outgoing president, Hu Jintao, is rumored to have diabetes.

New winners for Myanmar film awards

By Nyein Ei Ei Htwe and Nuam Bwai

AFTER six years of exile in Nay Pyi Taw, the Myanmar Academy Awards made a popular return to Yangon on December 30, with a ceremony that honoured domestically made films released in cinemas in 2011.

The revamped program also featured new presentation styles, and recognised a new group of talented filmmakers and actors who had been overlooked under the old judging system.

Of the 15 films that saw theatrical release in 2011, five were nominated for awards. Eight of the top awards went to a single movie, Htar Wara A Lin Tan Myar (Eternal Rays of Light), directed by U Tun Aung Zaw.

The film, which won for Best Film and Best Director, tells the story of a child adopted by a Kayin family, who grows up to become a school teacher and works for the benefit of his village. The story is based on a comic book, and the film was shot in Shwe Sar Yan village in Mandalay Region.

U Zaw Myint – owner of Yee Myint film company, which produced Htar Wara A Lin Tan Myar – said credit for the movie's success should go to director U Tun Aung Zaw.

"I didn't make this film. I'm just holding the Academy statue thanks to the efforts of U Tun Aung Zaw," U Zaw Myint said upon receiving the Best Film award.

"I feel like U Tun Aung Zaw was driving the car, and I was happily sitting beside him in the passenger seat. He directed the movie with all his heart, and that's why our production won the award," he said.

After receiving the Best Director prize, U Zaw Myint thanked the camera crew and everyone else who helped with the film, including the residents of Shwe Sar Yan village. He also lauded co-director So Kyaw San and cartoonist Moe Gyo, the latter of whom wrote the original story upon which the film was based.

"My friend, director Mg Myo Min, discovered the story 15 years ago, and I'm very thankful to him for that," U Zaw Myint said.

"For years I shot the film in my dreams, and at night I talked to my wife about it.

She never complained, and in fact she became the first audience for the movie. She gave me courage to shoot the story, so thanks to my wife."

U Zaw Myint's son, Naung Naung, won the award for Best Actor for the film, even though it was his first acting role.

The Best Actress prize went to Melody, who in the same film played the role of villager Ma Aye Chit, who falls in love with the teacher.

"Six years ago, director Nyi Nyi Tun Lwin allowed me to appear in a short drama on television, so I want to thank him for being my teacher," Melody said.

"I also want to thank director U Tun Aung Zaw, who believed in me enough to cast me as the main actress in his movie. He also guided me as a teacher and was patient with my mistakes like a father."

Melody also thanked her boyfriend, whose support was instrumental in allowing her to "spend the past six years working as an actress without any stress", and said she was grateful to Facebook for providing a forum for sharing her "thoughts and feelings" with her fans.

The Best Supporting Actor, comedian Mos, also won for his role in Htar Wara A Lin Tan Myar as a man who pretended he was well-educated even though he was illiterate.

"I'm now 59 years old and I've won an Academy statue. I feel proud and I believe this award was given by the audience, so thanks to the movie fans who treated us well," he said.

Musician Zaw Myo Htut won his third Academy Award for the movie's soundtrack, which was based on traditional Myanmar music, with changing tempos to suit the scenes in the film.

Htar Wara A Lin Tan Myar also earned awards for Best Scriptwriters (Myint Maung and Soe Kyaw San) and Best Editing (Hein Htet).

In a change of pace, the Best Cinematography award went to Tint San for his beautiful shots of Mandalay, Monywa, Sagaing, Mingun and Shan State in the movie Pan Kyar Wut Hmone (Pollen of the Water Lily), directed by Sin Yaw Maung Maung.

San Oo won the Best Sound award for the same movie.

Chit Snow Oo, meanwhile, won the Best Supporting Actress award for her role as a clever sister in Yin Kwe Nar (Sick of Broken Hearts).

"I had never acted like that character before. I had only performed in fancy styles in the past, so I want to thank director Min Oak Soe who believed I could play the role," Chit Snow Oo said.

"Also, without the accolades of the audience I would never have lasted for nine years as an actress, so I want to thank my fans as well as my parents who allowed me to become an actress."

Death to 'amazeballs' and other annoying words

By Katy Waldman

KATY Steinmetz had a delightful rundown last week in Time of some of 2012's worst words and phrases: the ones that popped up everywhere, like evil prairie dogs, making you long for a society that communicated solely through pictographs. Her bag of verbal irritants included YOLO, adorkable, mommy porn and zombie apocalypse.

But towering above these in sheer horribleness is one word that I couldn't even believe Steinmetz hadn't made up, despite mounting Twitter evidence to the contrary: "amazeballs". I suppose the idea is to convey cake balls, or perhaps some other type of balls, made of amazing. And then, by conjuring this Deep Image – which in its reluctance to be visualized puts poet Robert Bly to shame – to fan outward into abstraction, so that anything can be amazeballs: you, me, your go-to holiday outfit, brownies (which are square, and have nothing to do with balls of any kind). It is frightening.

I felt so traumatised by my discovery of amazeballs that I dropped everything and tried to prove that it (they?) didn't exist. But in September 2012, amazeballs rolled into the Collins Online Dictionary, with the definition "an expression of enthusiastic approval". The Urban Dictionary (one of the numerous websites that continues to be censored by the Myanmar government) glosses it thusly: "Basically beyond amazing. Being so awesome that a regular word can't describe you." It appeared on PerezHilton.com as early as 2009 – at which point multiple commenters implored the blogger to "stop trying to make amazeballs happen". On June 15, 2009, amazeballs started trending on Twitter, prompting Hilton to fire off a series of victory tweets about his contribution to the lexicon. But trouble brewed on the horizon: The comedy duo Jessica and Hunter posted a YouTube video on June 23 claiming that they had invented the term. Cue turf war.

As it happens, they're both wrong. The originator of the term appears to be fashion blogger Elizabeth Spiridakis. In an interview with Gavin McInnes, Spiridakis takes credit/responsibility for the adjective/noun/adjective-annoyingly-disguised-as-a-noun – though she wisely displaces some of the blame onto her BFFs. Spiridakis:

"To be fair, the true originator of 'amazeballs' was probably Ece Ozturk or Andrea Oliveri, two of my best friends. We met at Details mag in 2003 and all had a love of ridiculous shorthand and nicknames and dumb jokes like that. Putting '-balls' on everything was pretty standard (starveballs, hungballs, tiballs, exhaustballs = starving, hungry, tired, exhausted. regs vocab for girls at magazines.) I just had a forum to make it more public because I am addicted to the internets and they are just sorta 'whatevs' about blogs, etc."

Katy Perry and Kate Walsh, among others, began to appropriate amazeballs for their own ends. A recipe materialised. In a crowning moment for the neologism, Gwyneth Paltrow referred to one character's rendition of the Aretha Franklin hit "Ain't No Way" as "amazeballs" on Glee.

In November of this year, amazeballs racked up a more dubious honour. It was added to the Dictionary of the Most Annoying Words in the English Language, where it was defined as "an exclamation inviting someone to hit you".

It's still the best definition I've seen.

Myanmar's 'Newsweek' subscribers disgruntled by transition to online

By Zon Pann Pwint

AFTER nearly 80 years of publication, the US-based magazine Newsweek on December 31 released its last print issue, making way for its transition to an online-only format.

The magazine, which started publishing in 1933, has long been considered an important source for news analysis and political commentary by readers in Myanmar.

U Maung Maung Lwin — general manager of Innwa bookstore on Pansodan Street, which has sold subscriptions to Newsweek since 1995 — said most of the people who bought the magazine through his shop were “retirees”.

He said he didn't think the magazine's transition to a digital format would satisfy the preference among these older readers for print magazines.

“I tell the subscribers that they can read the magazine online, but they don't like that idea,” U Maung Maung Lwin said.

“The retirees say it's impossible to read online. They want to read news on paper. They want to make notes in the margins of the articles and highlight words they want to remember, and they want to be able to read the articles over again.”

He said he has made a career out of distributing English-language magazines such as Time, Newsweek, Fortune, The Economist, Reader's Digest and National Geographic, and he has encountered this type of transition in the past.

Innwa had distributed Businessweek and Discovery Channel magazines, both of which stopped printing for a short period but which re-launched as print magazines. The bookstore still sells issues of Discovery Channel magazine.

“So I hope we will see Newsweek in print form again in the future,” U Maung Maung Lwin said.

He added that Newsweek's distribution representative to Myanmar was always considerate of local readers, moderating the price to a reasonable K1200 an issue for subscribers.

“At my bookstore there have always been more subscribers to Newsweek than to Time,” he said, adding that each week his shop delivered 700 copies

Copies of the magazine became readily available in Myanmar shortly after independence in 1948.

U Maung Maung Lwin said there were always risks associated with supplying copies of the magazine to readers, especially when it contained articles about Myanmar that expressed views contrary to the draconian censorship policies of the military government.

“We had to tear some pages from the magazine if censored articles and news stories were included inside. If the front-page news was censored, the whole magazine was banned from distribution. Such incidents were relatively rare, but they happened at least once a year,” he said.

He said it was “sad” that the magazine's subscribers cannot enjoy the pleasure of freely reading the articles, decrying the timing of the print edition's termination mere months after censorship of print media was ended in the country.

U Zaw Win, 90, subscribed to Newsweek from 1955 to 1990.

The last print edition of 'Newsweek' on sale at Innwa bookstore in downtown Yangon. Pic: Ko Taik

“There are several widely read news magazine in the US, such Time and Newsweek. Time is read for political views and Newsweek is best for updated news. I prefer Newsweek,” he said.

He added that in 1955 the subscription rate was K90 a year.

“I stopped my subscription in 1990 because they always tore out the pages that included important news about Myanmar. For example, while reading the magazine, the pages might jump from 30 to 34. It spoiled the experience,” he said.

New Year's resolution: reading 366 books in 366 days

By Jeff Ryan

LIKE many of you, I have a nagging problem: I'm not a heroin user. Nor am I a knuckle-cracker, a nail-biter or a thumb-sucker. I (usually) pay off my credit cards every month. I travel, I see my family, I'm not stressed. And the big three — drinking, dieting, and smoking cessation? I'm good.

This is all great for my insurance rates, but not when trying to determine a New Year's resolution. So what can someone like me do for 2013?

I had the same dilemma last year, and my solution, while ingenious, turned out to be quite a challenge. I decided that I would read more. Not a book a month, or even a book a week. One entire book every day. Three hundred sixty-six books by year's end. “Challenge accepted!” the Barney Stinson of my soul boasted. No sweat.

If you're like me, the list of books you want to read is a hydra. Cutting one head off just scribbles new titles onto the list. I'm never ahead. My whole life I've been fighting this hydra tactically, trying to bleed a head dry by reading, say, one of Bob Woodward's or Neal Stephenson's books every year. But they keep writing more books! Time for a new solution: overwhelming firepower. Force-feed my eyeballs like every tomorrow was a final exam. By year's end, my 366 books would have that hydra on its knees.

And, believe it or not, it worked.

In the cold light of New Year's morning, my challenge seemed a bit daunting. So I gave myself a week. If I didn't have seven books finished by January 7, I obviously wasn't going to be able to keep such a meth-addled pace.

The resolution almost didn't last 24 hours, but New Year's night I forced my eyelids open and read a short horror novel. The following day I finished Cinderella Ate My Daughter, which, despite its title, was not a horror novel but a pop-culture history I'd been working on for a few days. The day after that I peeled off a Walking Dead collection. Driving to work, I hit the final disc of a Nelson DeMille audiobook. The night after that, I read the final chapter of a Narnia book to my daughter at bedtime.

Seven days, seven books. So one character attribute to the exclusion of everything else.

If you've ever been in a team sport, school play or med school, you know how that commitment supersedes all others. Parties are missed, sleep is skipped, emails go unreturned. “I can't — I have practice/rehearsal/a corpse to dissect.”

My plate is already pretty full: I work full-time, try to be a good husband, and am always up for a good game of Pretty Pretty Princess. Mine isn't a tougher schedule than that of other working parents, but it is tough. So the challenge was to see if a heavy-lifting year of reading could be done almost exclusively in the crumbs of found time in my life. The oil-change can and parenting mean there is not a second to spare for reading. My worst lull was during a Florida trip, when I barely ploughed through the 300 pages of John Irving's The Fourth Hand. And that was during a whole week of family vacation — the time when normal people read more. It took a month of catch-up to get back at pace.

But for every period behind the eight ball, I had weeks when I was days or even weeks ahead of schedule. A slack day at work, an hour doing yard work with the iPod, a solo plane ride or overnight stay — these were my moments, and I seized them. Believe it or not, I grew so far ahead of my pace that I successfully read all far, so good. A good six of those books were timing and luck — it can take me three weeks to finish an audiobook, and more than a month to finish a bedtime story. But I gave it another week. And another. Soon my every waking thought was on reading.

The prime directive for this sort of project, you might think, is to pick short books. I don't deny that 2012 was not the year for me to launch into Terry Goodkind. Want some Tolstoy? The Forged Coupon, not War and Peace. But as it turned out, Read Short Books was rule No 2.

No, my prime directive was: no min-maxing, or focusing on wait, I don't need those sick days or lunch hours. My test for this was my wife: I didn't even tell her I was tackling a book a day until six weeks into the project. If she suspected I was slacking — dishes undone, litter box a ruin, laundry growing sentient — then I was failing my prime directive.

The idea of a full book a day — going from title page to back-jacket blurbs — went quickly out the window. I read lots of books at once, and can go days making progress in five or six volumes without technically finishing any of them. Then there are flat-out busy days, where the actual drop-dead demands of my job 1016 pages of George R R Martin's A Dance With Dragons. It took me three full weeks, but I slew that Dragon.

I did have to give up some things. I listened to audiobooks exclusively — no music for me. I gave up video games, which wasn't as big a deal for me as I expected it would be. Mainly, though, I decided that Starship Troopers 2, Lost Boys 3 and Saws V-VII weren't worth the midnight oil I was expending on them. Yes, you, too, can read a book a day, just by giving up direct-to-DVD horror films!

If you're hoping to read a book a day, I also encourage shamelessness. You don't see salad-eating contests on the Fourth of July; you see hot dogs. So I grabbed as much literary junk food as I could stomach for the days when I wasn't reading a “real” book. For you, that might be erotica or category romances. It might be fan fiction or “Star Wars” novels, pulps or New Age tracts. Whatever floats your boat. Reading is reading.

Here's another not-so-shameful secret: capes. Superheroes have saved me so many times I might as well be Lois Lane. I can start and finish a six-issue collection of Captain America or Green Lantern comics in less than an hour. That's a book, or at least it is under my definition of “something printed that cost about $20”. Don't blame me, blame Marvel Comics.

And lest you think all I did was splash in the literary kiddie pool, I also read works of Virginia Woolf, Willa Cather, Nicholson Baker, Thomas Hardy, James Baldwin, Umberto Eco and Weird Al Yankovic. I have now read everything by Mary Roach and Alice Sebold, and am thiiiiis close to having the complete set of Bill Bryson and Sarah Vowell.

If you follow my path and read a book a day in 2013, you'll find that you truly, truly will not be reading more than usual. Right now, you are probably reading a comparable amount to me — but you're reading newspapers, Facebook, Twitter and Slate. I let that stuff go for a year in the interest of making my quota. I always dreamed that in retirement I might be able to knock off a book a day: Turns out, I didn't have to wait. — Slate

Afghan female rapper seeks reason with rhymes

By Sardar Ahmad

KABUL — Sporting a long leather coat and western jeans under a headscarf, Soosan Feroz looks like many modern women in Kabul.

But she is a surprising new phenomenon in this conservative Islamic country — the nation's first female rapper.

Her lyrics though are not unfamiliar for many of her fellow countrywomen — she raps of rape, abuse and atrocities that Afghan women have endured during decades of war in a country gripped by poverty.

"My raps are about the sufferings of women in my country, the pains of the war that we have endured and the atrocities of the war," Feroz said in an interview in the office of a local company that is helping her record her first album, between local performances including at the US embassy in Kabul.

Like most fellow Afghans, the 23-year-old says her life is filled with bitterness — memories of war, bombing and a life at refugee camps in neighbouring Iran and Pakistan.

'If rap singing is a way to tell your miseries, Afghans have a lot to say.'

She was taken to Pakistan as a child by her parents and later to Iran, escaping a bloody civil war at home in 1990s.

Two years after the 2001 US-led invasion of her war-scarred nation that toppled the Taliban, the then-teenager returned home with her family.

She worked as a carpet weaver with her other siblings for a living until she discovered her new talent.

Told that rap and hip-hop had become a way for many artists around the world to express daily hardships in their lives, Feroz says: "If rap singing is a way to tell your miseries, Afghans have a lot to say. That's why I chose to be a rapper."

She recalls her woes at Iranian refugee camps in her first recorded piece of music, "Our Neighbours", which has been posted on Youtube and viewed nearly 100,000 times: "What happened to us in the neighbouring country? / We became 'the dirty Afghan' / At their bakeries we were pushed at the back of the queue."

The lyrics are borne from personal experience, Feroz said.

"As a child when I was going to bring bread from our neighbourhood bakery, the Iranians would tell me, 'Go back, you dirty Afghan'. I would be the last one in the line to get my bread," she said.

Millions of Afghans still live in Iran and Pakistan, which together hosted about seven million refugees after the former Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan in 1979.

Feroz was too young to remember the bloody battles of the 1980s between the Russian soldiers and freedom fighters known as mujahedin but her first song is full of war tales, with one line proclaiming: "We went to Europe for a better life [but] in refugee camps we rotted."

Thousands of Afghans put their lives on the line every year to reach Europe through dangerous and illegal routes on land and sea. Those who make it often spend years in isolated refugee camps.

Afghan pop star Farid Rastagar has offered to help the young artist release an album, the first song of which will be released this month.

One of the songs is called "Naqis-Ul Aql", which can be translated as "deficient-

Soosan Feroz (right) rehearses with Afghan pop musician Farid Rastagar at a recording studio in Kabul on December 10, 2012. Pic: AFP in-mind" — a common belief about women among Afghan men.

"In this rap, she sings about the miseries of the women in Afghanistan, about abuses and wrong beliefs that still exists about women," Rastagar said.

Afghan women have made some progress since the fall of the Taliban but many still suffer horrific abuse including so-called "honour killings" for perceived sexual disobedience.

Feroz, the daughter of a former civil servant and an illiterate housewife who remarkably let their daughter sing, has already made scores of enemies not only among conservatives but also within her own family.

After releasing her first song on the internet, Feroz's uncles and their families have shunned her, accusing her of bringing shame on them. Others, mostly anonymous callers, have threatened to kill her.

"What's my fault?" she asks. "I always receive phone calls from unknown men who say I'm a bad girl and they will kill me," she says, her dark eyes welling with tears.

Sitting next to her is her father, Abdul Ghafaar Feroz, who says he prides himself on being her "personal secretary".

"I'm not deterred," Feroz said, her father nodding his head in agreement. "Somebody had to start this, I did and I don't regret it and I will continue. I want to be the voice of women in my country." — AFP

Singer Rain faces military discipline

SEOUL — South Korean pop icon Rain is to be disciplined after it emerged he may have flouted military service rules while dating a top actress, the defence ministry said last week.

Ministry spokesman Kim Min-Seok told reporters that the 30-year-old singer would appear before a military disciplinary committee this week.

"However, he is not expected to land in jail," Kim said.

Rain is a little over halfway through the two-year military service that is mandatory for all able-bodied South Korean men.

He has been serving as an "entertainment soldier" who appears in military-run TV and radio programs aimed at boosting morale.

South Korea's well-oiled celebrity gossip machine went into overdrive last week when it was confirmed that Rain had begun dating Kim Tae-Hee, a major TV drama star with a massive following in Japan.

Fan excitement over the match-up between two of the country's most high-profile celebrities was tempered by questions over how the couple had managed numerous dates over the past four weeks.

During their military service, South Korean men are largely confined to their barracks and given little free time.

Tabloid pictures of the couple showed Rain, 30, driving a private car in military uniform, contrary to service guidelines, and not wearing his army beret.

The singer failed to wear a beret outside his camp and made "private contact" with the actress three times while returning from official duty, ministry spokesman Kim said.

After the tabloid pictures emerged, the ministry's website was bombarded with messages calling for Rain to be disciplined, with thousands of people signing an online petition urging an investigation.

Some suggested he be forced to repeat his military service like the "Gangnam Style" star Psy, who was made to serve twice after it emerged he had furthered his showbiz interests during his first stint.

In 2011, popular hip-hop singer MC Mong was given a suspended jail sentence for delaying his conscription into the military on false medical grounds.

The fact that Rain and Kim Tae-Hee, 32, were indeed dating was confirmed by Kim's agency on January 1.

"They are currently getting to know each other," the agency said in a statement.

Kim is best known for her roles in popular Korean dramas such as Iris and Stairway to Heaven, and is in great demand as a brand publicist.

Military service is taken extremely seriously in South Korea, which remains technically at war with North Korea because the 1950-1953 Korean War ended with a ceasefire rather than a peace treaty.

Apart from those with physical disabilities, exemptions are rare and anyone refusing to serve — for moral or religious reasons — faces an automatic jail term.

One of the best-known cases of evasion involved Korean-American pop singer Steve Yoo.

In 2002, just as he was about to be called up, Yoo gave up his Korean nationality and became a naturalised US citizen.

The South Korean government considered it an act of desertion and he was deported and banned from returning for life. — AFP

Poring over a story, not a score

By Jason Wilson

IF you have ever read anything about wine, you've surely noticed the backlash — the veritable revolution — that has been waged against critics who rate wines with numbers. A new wave of sommeliers, bloggers and wine journalists directs venom at Robert Parker, at Wine Spectator, at any entity that sips and spits and scores.

Wine blogs and their comments sections are filled with would-be revolutionaries, trembling with indignation at the injustice of the 100-point scale. These wine-soaked Che Guevaras declare that the influence of the 100-point scale, such as the one Parker pioneered in his Wine Advocate in the early 1980s, is at long last on the wane. Or soon will be. Maybe. Someday.

The revolution, they tell us, is coming and it will be beautiful. We presumably will all hold hands in the liquor store and sing "Kumbaya", and no one will ever again buy a wine simply because it was rated at 90-plus points.

Now, I'm no fan of scores either, but the reality is that change is still far away.

'How does the average drinker choose wines in a post-score world? Wine critics around the world seem to be searching for the answer.'

Shelf talkers in almost every wine-store aisle still tout the critics' numbers, and consumers still buy wines based on those numbers. The reason people cling to scores is fairly obvious: What is their alternative? Obscure tasting notes about aromas and flavours? How does the average drinker choose wines in a post-score world? Wine critics around the world seem to be searching for the answer.

In Italy, the Slow Food movement published its first English-language guide to Italian wines, "Slow Wine 2012: A Year in the Life of Italy's Vineyards and Wines", the second edition of which will be published by Slow Food Editore and distributed by Chelsea Green late in January. "Slow Wine" introduces readers to more than 400 wine producers and more than 3000 wines.

"We have abandoned the very easy-to-understand, but ultimately also trivialising, method of awarding points and sought to look beyond the glass," write Giancarlo Gariglio and Fabio Giavedoni, the editors, in their introduction to the "Slow Wine 2012" guide. "What matters is wine's soul."

So what is "Slow Wine's" revolutionary methodology? Wineries are rated with a rather confusing array of symbols: snails (for exemplifying Slow Food values), bottles (for excellent quality) and coins (for good value). And then there is a short narrative broken into three sections: People, Vineyards and Wines. "Storytelling is the key concept underpinning our approach," write Gariglio and Giavedoni.

Storytelling is Slow Food's stock in trade. The 130,000-member worldwide organisation, as many know, was started by activist Carlo Petrini in the late 1980s in response to the opening of a McDonald's near the Spanish Steps in Rome. The Slow Food manifesto calls for a "good, clean and fair" model of food production and protests fast food, industrial food and homogenisation. Its logo, the snail, has become a sort of Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval for the eco-gastronomy set.

So what is a slow wine? That's a little hard to pin down. I met Giavedoni at Slow Food's biennial Salone del Gusto in fall 2010 when the Italian edition was launched, and he told me then: "For a wine to be a slow wine, it doesn't just transmit taste. It must also transmit values. They have two kinds of complexity, both in the glass and outside the glass."

The "Slow Wine" editors want to make clear that storytelling did not trump rigour. The book represents 2000 winery visits and 6000 hours of work by a staff of about 200 who visit every winery. "We are journalists, not novelists," Gariglio wrote via e-mail. "We don't try to make things look pretty, we don't seek out the folkloristic side."

That is true about the prose. The 2013 entry for Antonelli San Marco (awarded a snail), which I visited recently in Montefalco, Umbria: "Filippo Antonelli always keeps a careful eye on the future, interpreting modern times while preserving the charm of the past. Which is why his cellar is one of the finest expressions of the Umbrian winemaking tradition."

I'm not certain that sort of vague prose tells me much more than a point rating would. I know it doesn't begin to capture Filippo Antonelli, whom I've also met, and who told me hilarious stories of how he worries about his older children who — like a lot of young Italians — don't drink wine and "love the stupid Justin Bieber".

Likewise, "Slow Wine" describes Antonelli's Contrario 2009, a modern, fresh bottling of the Sagrantino grape, by saying it "represents an interesting experiment with the variety. It manages to bring out all the grape's fruity character without interfering with the tannins."

Belgian chocolatiers face up to changing tastes

By Jerome Rivet

BRUSSELS — Belgium is rightly proud as producer of some of the world's finest chocolate but changing tastes and new markets in Asia and the Arab world are shaking up its somewhat predictable scene.

"Belgian traditional chocolates? Some people still do them really well, such as the major brands," said Laurent Gerbaud, one of the new generation of chocolatiers trying to keep up with a discerning clientele.

In his workshop in the centre of Brussels, a customer will find few traces of the Manon, the praline filled with coffee-flavoured cream and covered in white chocolate that has been the industry mainstay for decades.

Gerbaud instead offers small chocolates made with exotic and unusual flavourings — figs from Izmir in Turkey, the bitter berries of the barberry tree, Cape pears or yuzu, a citrus fruit from Japan.

"My priority is clear, simple flavours, using the best ingredients possible. My chocolates use less sugar and fat in response to increasing demand," Gerbaud said.

Such chocolates with a bitter and sharp edge were first made in France in the 1990s as artisan chocolatiers came onto the scene.

In Belgium, the trend has been slower to get off the ground in an industry dominated by such illustrious names as Leonidas, Godiva, Cote d'Or or Neuhaus.

But that is beginning to change, with new brands coming through, even if progress is slow and Belgium's some 400 artisan chocolatiers remain wary of getting carried away.

"It is extremely difficult to establish a brand, to build up a clientele and to be profitable. After 11 years, I still do not have profits," said Gerbaud, one of the best in the business.

For the established brands, the challenge is different, needing to find new markets if they are to expand beyond their home base.

Leonidas was founded after the 1913 International Exhibition by Leonidas Kestekides, a Greek pastry maker who decided to settle in Belgium, and the company is using the 100th anniversary celebrations to update its offering.

Kestekides' descendants still run the business, with the Leonidas brand known worldwide through some 1300 outlets in 50 countries, selling 6000 tonnes a year or one million chocolates a day.

"It is clear that our potential for development lies more in the emerging economies rather than in the mature market here in Europe," said Hugues Moens, commercial director for Leonidas.

China, already home to 40 Leonidas shops, and the Arab world are now the priority for the company.

In Belgium as in France, with some 350 shops in each country, Leonidas has to find the right balance between tradition and innovation so as to keep its old customers and attract new ones.

"We do not forget that our success is based on the loyalty of customers who hold to traditional chocolates such as the Manon, our best-seller," said Claude Seneque, master chocolatier at the company.

To attract new customers and to cater for changing tastes, Leonidas must also have something for those who find the brand "a little old-fashioned", according to Pauline Vervoort, 26, from Brussels.

As part of its anniversary celebrations, Leonidas has made new pralines — smaller and even more chocolate packed — and plans to spruce up its shops.

"In Belgium, to succeed in chocolate is harder and harder. You have to be tough but also creative all the time," Gerbaud said. — AFP

The weird year in wine and spirits

By Elin McCoy

DARK, cold outer space is the new wine and spirits frontier.

The extraterrestrial terroir taste in Meteorito, a cabernet made at Chile's Tremonte winery, comes from a 4.5-billion-year-old meteorite from the asteroid belt between Jupiter and Mars.

Winery general manager Ian Hutcheon, owner of the nearby Centro Astronomico Tagua Tagua and anxious to join his two passions, submerged the 8-centimetre space rock in some of his 2010 cabernet for a year.

In a blind tasting with colleagues, he found the bottled wine had a livelier and fresher taste, "with a curious twist".

The Ardbeg whisky distillery on the Scottish island of Islay, on the other hand, announced that it had sent plastic vials of unaged single malt molecules where no dram had gone before: the international space station, 400 kilometres (250 miles) above earth.

The mission: a two-year study with space research company NanoRacks to see how the famously peaty spirit ages in near zero-G. The cost to find out how complex flavour molecules called "terpenes" interact with charred oak in this atmosphere is half a million US dollars.

Will all this result in new aromas and flavours for a space-inspired whisky? We'll beam down the results next year.

Space's vast potential for wine and spirits was only one highlight among 2012's weird and wacky stories. The past year was also a time of strange wines we definitely don't need, like Almond Roca cream dessert wine from Washington State, which takes chocolate-infused wines to a new, treacly level.

British merchant Sheldon's Wine Cellars offers the "uncomplicated, easy-drinking" 2011 Royal Blush Rose, with a label based on nude Prince Harry photos taken at an August bare-it-all party in Las Vegas.

And there are the wines of Dr Ruth Westheimer. Labels of her Sonoma-made Vin d'Amour chardonnay, cabernet and white zinfandel feature a portrait of the famous 84-year-old sex therapist.

Dr Ruth says the obvious — that wine helps couples relax and get aroused, but too much impairs performance.

Which is why she wanted her wines to have a weak 6 percent alcohol. Fifty shades of chutzpah!

Eroticism is also key to the just-launched G-Spirits line of vodka, single malt whisky and rum, created by former bartenders Maximilian and Julian Goldbach in Germany. Before bottling, every single drop of booze is poured over the naked breasts of beautiful women, like Hungarian playmate of the year Alexa Varga, to give the taste "a unique erotic character".

According to Max Goldbach, their customers, mostly men (surprise!), range from 18 to 72. Lest you are worried about how sanitary this is, the website claims that medical personnel supervise. The labels are X-rated, which is why you'll have to go to the website to view.

Maybe G-Spirits call for the nuttiest wine accessory of the year, Vinderpants. Advertised as "underpants for your wine", the cotton and spandex bottle coverings appeal, I think, only to those with a very special sense of humour. Still, there were just two left in stock on Amazon.com when I checked right after Christmas. — Bloomberg News

Pumpkin and chicken curry in a hurry

Main Tips

Cut the meat and pumpkin into small, bite-sized pieces. They will cook more quickly. While sealing the meat, allow all the pieces to seal equally and fry them until the juices come out. Then add the pumpkin. If you like basil, add more to give additional flavour and aroma.

PUMPKIN is one of the most popular vegetables for cuisine from all around the world, and there are plenty of recipes for including it in Western, Asian and Mediterranean dishes. Sweet desserts, savoury dishes, salads and curries can all be made using different varieties of pumpkin, and it goes well with all meats as well as seafood. What a great vegetable!

Pumpkin is also a great food for all ages, from babies and grandparents. I love the sweet flavour, and I'm inspired by its adaptability for different dishes from different cultures.

So for this month I'd like to share recipes using pumpkin from around the world. We will cook them, grill them and roast them, and we can bake them and steam them as well.

To start, this week I'm presenting a recipe for chicken and pumpkin curry. I was introduced to this beautiful dish by a Kayin woman living in Coffs Harbour, Australia. I like the texture of chicken, the sweet flavour of pumpkin and the aroma of the lemon grass. It was the first time my husband and I tried such a dish, but we ended up making it again and again once we returned home.

Pic: Phyo

Pumpkin and chicken curry
INGREDIENTS
(6 servings)
700g of chicken thigh (6 pieces)
1 cup of chopped onions
2 heads of lemon grass
2 cloves of garlic
700-800g of pumpkin
1 cup of loosely packed Thai basil
½ teaspoon of turmeric powder
½ teaspoon of chilli powder
½ teaspoon of salt
1 tablespoon of fish sauce
2 tablespoon of vegetable oil

PREPARATION
After cleaning the chicken thighs, cut them into bite-sized pieces (about 4 square centimetres), and marinate them with turmeric powder and salt for at least 15 minutes. Meanwhile, finely chop the onions and cut the pumpkin into 4cm cubes. I like to keep the skin attached to the pumpkin while it is cooking, as it gives more flavour and prevents the vegetable from becoming mushy during cooking. Wash the pumpkin cubes and drain well.

Clean the lemon grass well, cut them into 6-7cm lengths, and slightly crush the white heads. When everything is ready, heat the vegetable oil in a wok or cooking pot over high heat. Fry the chopped onions until they turn a golden colour, then add the garlic, lemon grass, chilli powder and basil, and fry for a couple minutes. Add the marinated chicken into the pot and seal the pieces well. Add the pumpkin and fish sauce and stir gently. Add 1 cup of water into the curry and let it gently boil. After a couple minutes turn the heat down to medium and cook the curry with a closed lid for 30 minutes, or until the chicken and pumpkin become tender. Garnish with fresh basil and serve with steamed rice, stir-fried green vegetable, fish sauce and chilli relish.

Stir-fried snow peas
(6 servings)
300-350g of snow peas
1 teaspoon of vegetable oil

PREPARATION
Wash the snow peas and drain. When they are nearly dry, heat the vegetable oil in a nonstick fry pan over high heat. When the oil becomes hot, add the snow peas and toss or stir them quickly. Cover with a lid and fry for 5-6 minutes, then open the lid and toss frequently. Mix with sliced garlic and turn off the heat. Leave the pan for 6-8 minutes with the lid closed.

Fish sauce and chilli relish
2 tablespoons of fish sauce
2 cloves of crushed garlic
2 teaspoon of chilli flakes
Mix all the ingredients in a small bowl and serve. For more spice, add more chilli.

FOOD REVIEW

ONE of the advantages of travelling by car in Myanmar is the freedom to dine where you like, rather than where the bus company will get the largest commission. The downside is the plethora of options makes it hard to settle on a single choice, and it's always a bit of pot luck (see "A roll of the dice", November 19). Happily, on a recent trip to Mawlamyine I lucked out. Family Two opened only two months ago and is nestled on a bend in the Yangon-Mawlamyine Highway about five minutes east of the small town of Mubalin, not far from where the Sittoung River divides Bago Region and Mon State. It's only a short way before Kyaikto, so is also a worthy refuelling site for pilgrims heading to the Golden Rock. It has the typical roadside dining hall thing going on but the lack of walls on three sides allow the fresh breeze to swirl through. The shop is commendably clean, although you would expect no less from such a new establishment. What it lacks in atmosphere it makes up for in service and food.

All in the family

The traditional Myanmar curries are delicious and cheap (most dishes K800, rice K300) and my recommendations are the mutton and chicken.

Another personal favourite is the refreshing min kwar ywet thoke, or pennywort salad, which comes with a healthy serve of chopped tomato and fried garlic.

There's plenty of piping hot green tea and jaggery after your meal, of course. The drink selection lets Family Two down a little, although being Mon State the juice was deliciously fresh. And, as the name suggests, Family Two is family run, so the waiters actually exhibit some desire to assist weary diners. But the pièce de résistance (adding exponentially to the X Factor rating) is that rarest of beasts in rural Myanmar: a clean, functioning, Western-style toilet. It even has a decent shower room. What more could you ask for? — RR onto a small pool animated with live koi – a touch of the country in the city, the fish a Vietnamese symbol of luck and prosperity. Whoever dressed Cuc Gach has a good eye, and an interest in history.

That someone is Tran Binh, an architect native to southern Vietnam and devoted to what he learned about his craft from the countryside. The Vietnamese have a saying: If you start something, use a brick first. Cuc Gach translates into English as “a brick”.

Our chaperone for the first leg of my Vietnamese journey, Lam Quang Huy, grins as we ease into our seats on the top floor of Cuc Gach, a peaked tile roof over our heads. It isn’t the four-poster bed frame turned into a curtained table for six nearby that elicits his reaction, but an old Lygo milk canister holding chopsticks, the container a throwback to his youth. Little stories are behind every detail in the restaurant, where bright green morning glory stems are put to use as drinking straws and the music brings back the Vietnam of the 1970s. As the owner’s grandmother did, the kitchen staff makes almost everything in-house, from the pickles to the tofu.

Unusual (and hard!) for this professional eater, I leave the ordering to Huy. He asks the waiter for soup, followed by “something salty” and vegetables, a selection of three dishes that typify the region. As we wait for the soup, Huy teaches us how to mince red chillis with the tips of the chopsticks and sings the praises of fish sauce, or what he calls “Chanel No 5”. No meal in Vietnam is complete without a dash or more of nuoc mam.

We devour a catfish soup made sweet and sour with pineapple and tamarind, and deep-fried mackerel framed by julienne green mango. Our guide, raised southeast of the Mekong Delta, approves. “Food by my grandmother,” Huy compliments the spread.

The meal concludes with the requested vegetables: bitter melon, bok choy, pumpkin and Vietnamese greens over which rich fish sauce is spooned.

Lessons learned: Even though they might look similar, the vegetables in Vietnam taste more green, more vivid, more of themselves. Also, first impressions can be wrong.

10 Dang Tat, Ward Tan Dinh, District 1, Saigon; cucgachquan.com.vn. Dinner about $15 a person.

Secret Cinema smashes through screen

By Maureen Cofflard

LONDON — Under the menacing eye of guards, the cinemagoers sit in silence as their 1950s bus rumbles through London. Suddenly, a prison looms out of the darkness.

Welcome to Secret Cinema, where the film is not just on the screen — viewers can wander up to the characters, brought to life by actors in a setting that seems to have been plucked straight out of the movie.

Guests arrive armed with nothing more than a string of cryptic emails detailing where to go and how to dress. They don't even know what film they are going to see, despite having paid £43.50 (US$70) each for a ticket.

"You tell people nothing. They have no idea of what they're going to see, what they're going to experience," said Fabien Riggall, who founded Secret Cinema in 2007. "And once they get there, they become more open and more adventurous."

This innovative approach to cinema — which spreads to New York and Athens in April — has seen organisers transform a warehouse into the futuristic dystopia of Blade Runner, a park into Lawrence of Arabia and dank tunnels into The Battle of Algiers.

Moviegoers have found themselves conducting mock scientific experiments before a screening of Prometheus in a warehouse-turned-spaceship, and operating a pretend penicillin racket before sitting down to watch The Third Man.

A British cinemagoer experiences a Secret Cinema event in east London on December 1, 2012, for which they were asked to arrive in period dress and were transported to a mock 1950s prison system. Pic: AFP

The latest instalment of the adventure offered the crowds a taste of the harsh prison life suffered by Morgan Freeman and Tim Robbins in the 1994 classic The Shawshank Redemption.

Told to arrive at an east London library wearing 1950s clothing, they were led into a mock courtroom and sentenced — to much giggling — for crimes ranging from kidnapping to bigamy.

The new convicts were then shuttled by vintage bus to an abandoned school, transformed by the Secret Cinema team into a grim US prison.

Hustled inside by uniformed "prison guards", they were forced to strip off their 1950s attire — much to the dismay of those who had ignored instructions to wear long underwear.

the three hours before the screening exploring their jail, periodically harassed by the guards as they munched on burgers bought from the "infirmary".

"If you play along, it's amazing," said Andy, a six-time Secret Cinema-goer who has previously come dressed as a Bedouin for Lawrence of Arabia and a psychiatric patient for One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest.

"Every time, it gets bigger and better," he said.

From a modest first audience of 400 people in 2007, Secret Cinema has become a massive operation, hosting 13,500 excitable prisoners during a month-long run of The Shawshank Redemption that ended in December.

The latest show saw the launch of a "Secret Hotel" offering overnight stays in the prison, sleeping in bunks in the cells for an extra £30 a person.

"Every production, we try to create something that goes a little bit beyond what we did before in terms of how the audience become part of that world and how you allow the blur between the performance and the audience," said Riggall.

He added that many fans see this immersive form of cinema as an antidote to the more mundane experience of simply sitting in front of a screen.

"People are looking for adventure. They want to take a step away from everything they already know, and I think that the hotel is another step," the 37-year-old said.

"We had actors sleeping next to the audience — you might wake up and there'd be a prisoner singing a 50-year-old song next to you. The whole building is a stage."

Tickets have already sold out for London's 20th Secret Cinema event next April, which for the first time will run simultaneously with shows at secret locations in Athens and New York.

Jos, a young Dutchman living in London, said film fans in other cities would welcome the project with open arms.

"You get sucked in," he said, as prisoners loitered in a basketball court behind him. "At the start it's funny and then 10 minutes later you're really into it."

"It really makes you think about what it would be like to be in prison — and it's probably not for me," he laughed. — AFP

YOUR STARS

By Astrologer
Aung Myin Kyaw

Aquarius

(Jan 20 - Feb 18)

Your fervent desire to keep your dreams alive will prompt you to cultivate a lifestyle based on what might be, rather than on what actually is. By using your skills and talents you can create a vast change, but it will occur slowly and gradually. When in need of relaxation, take a long journey in search of knowledge. Emotional matters and family relationships will become progressively calmer.

Pisces

(Feb 19 - Mar 20)

Break up your established patterns of thinking by creating sudden and even radical change, with an eye toward replacing the old and tired with something new and exciting. Use technology to your advantage, especially when it comes to improving your financial status. Reconciliation in relationships is recommended. Give your full attention to any unexpected developments in your love life.

Aries

(March 21 - April 19)

A scrupulous person should try to maintain a contained manner despite his or her ill feelings. Endurance is one of the valuable qualities of the mind that can be used to conquer interference. Social relationships could become inactive, and your state of being could become duller, because of your tendency to isolate yourself, which is not to say that this inclination is necessarily incorrect.

Taurus

(April 20 - May 20)

Neutral men are the devil's allies. Make it your principle to choose the middle path: In doing good deeds avoid fame, and avoid disgrace by shunning bad deeds. Develop a more optimistic outlook towards life, but don't allow exciting experiences in social affairs to divert you from the right path. Without the proper attention, your efforts to manage your love life will result in failure.

Gemini

(May 21 - June 20)

Now is a good time to make valuable associations that can lead to progress and happiness in the future. Spend this week profitably turning your attention to social development, which can be a source of financial success. An old partner will unexpectedly get in touch with you, to offer a profit-sharing deal. The time is right for you to put things on a happier basis, but love will be chilly.

Cancer

(June 22 - July 22)

Do not allow rumour to preside over truth. Understand that it is harder to create a synthesis than to study, but the true picture can be noticed in its reflection, and the truth will come out after all. If you keep moving forward guided by your own deep-rooted beliefs, your frustration will soon come to an end. A big change will lead to prosperity and an improved lifestyle.

Leo

(July 23 - Aug 22)

Be passionate about your work and have the integrity to stand up for your ideas, but also know when to compromise. Draw the line at your most deeply held principles, but be sure to have a clear understanding of exactly what those principles are. Communication has its own changeable style, but don't let personality overshadow purpose. Romance is in great favour, and you are sure to bind with love.

Virgo

(Aug 23 - Sept 22)

Negative thinking poisons the atmosphere, and it is dangerous to the spirit as well as to the body. The best way to maintain optimism is to associate with others of a positive nature. Develop the art of speaking well and coherently. A reflection of your thoughts and actions will create a picture for tomorrow that will be a true picture of your deeds. Love is not to be seen by the eyes.

Libra

(Sept 23 - Oct 22)

Even a fool knows the value of justice, but a wise person understands that balance is sometimes harder to maintain than justice. The structure of each problem is unique, and justice cannot be made from weak suggestions (however constructive they might be), or from the interference of destructive evidence. Whatever the obstacles, do your best without giving in to the temptation to become a lone outlaw.

Scorpio

(Oct 23 - Nov 21)

Tranquility is never gained from outside. Use your own hard-won knowledge and experience to forge a great and successful life for yourself. Start by conquering your mind and escaping from delusion and intolerant attitudes. Associating with old friends can help foster new ideas. You will find it easier to manage your sexual desires.

Sagittarius

(Nov 22 - Dec 21)

Your experience allows you to see many things that others cannot, but be careful not to become too overwhelmed: Know your destination before you set out on the journey. Stay alert, and understand that a successful team is a group of many hands but one mind. Understand that interference is a warning that the forces of change are at work, but don't allow them to undermine your determination to achieve your goals. Love belongs to you.

Capricorn

(Dec 22 - Jan 19)

Knowledge is to be defined as justified true belief, and as epistemology that has no boundaries and no limits. Seek out new educational opportunities to improve the quality of your mind. You have the responsibility to do your best for the world to which you belong. A good place to start is by performing useful, selfless services for other people.

Ingo Positions

HelpAge International is a global network of not-for-profit organisations with a mission to work with and for disadvantaged older people worldwide to achieve a lasting improvement in the quality of their lives. HelpAge International's East Asia Pacific Regional Office (EAPRO) is responsible for the regional programme, working in partnership with affiliates and partner organisations in more than 20 countries in the region. HelpAge is widening the scope of its work in Myanmar. Currently, HelpAge, in collaboration with relevant Government agencies and partners, is implementing several projects that support older people and other vulnerable groups strengthening their livelihood and food security, health and DRR capacities in Ayerawaddy Delta, Mandalay and Sagaing Regions. The overall aim of the programme is to reduce poverty and vulnerability in general and to facilitate older people's participation in community development. In 2013, HelpAge will move into Kayin State for the first time. This position is part of the HelpAge structure in Myanmar to lead the implementation of a European Union (EU) funded project under the

Aid for Uprooted People (AUP) in Myanmar budget, titled 'Creating an Enabling Post-conflict Environment for Populations in Kayin State, and Facilitating the Safe Return of IDPs and Refugees'. HelpAge in collaboration with partners will implement the project from early 2013 to early 2017 in 80 communities of Thandaunggyi, Hpa-pun and Kawkreik townships. Field implementation will be carried out in each target township either by HelpAge staff directly or by local partners. HelpAge, Karen Baptist Convention and Golden Plain have formed a Consortium with plans to jointly implement this programme comprising activities in the water and sanitation, education, livelihoods, health and rural infrastructure. The Consortium is committed to its core values of enabling positive change and building capacities of the communities by bridging relief and development interventions and working with established local and external networks and partnerships. HelpAge leads the Consortium which will be coordinating the work among the above-mentioned agencies and will ensure overall compliance to donor regulations of its effective program implementation. The HelpAge International Myanmar is currently

Davis Cup row over pay, support deepens

CHENNAI, India – India's Davis Cup campaign was thrown into turmoil on January 4 after a stand-off between players and administrators worsened ahead of next month's tie against South Korea.

Eight players, headed by Somdev Devvarman, threatened to boycott the Asia-Oceania first-round tie in New Delhi from February 1-3 if a slew of demands made by them were not accepted.

The demands include better distribution of Davis Cup prize money, a change in the squad's support staff, a full-time physiotherapist and the players' involvement in the choice of venues for ties.

The All India Tennis Association (AITA) said it could not accommodate all the demands, and insisted those players who did not accept a proposed disciplinary code will not be considered for selection.

The players issued a statement on January 4 saying they are "regrettably, unavailable for selection" unless the AITA is willing to consider what they feel are "legitimate suggestions".

"We wish to emphatically state that all of us are united in our stand against certain practices observed in the management of the Davis Cup squad," the players' statement said.

"We are not looking to challenge the authority of the AITA, but are making a genuine attempt to change things for the improvement of Indian tennis."

Devvarman added: "If, in our opinion, the AITA's response is unfair, I will stand united with the rest of the players and continue on our pursuit for changes in the system."

AITA chief executive Hironmoy Chatterjee said his federation had already spoken with the players but insisted indiscipline would not be tolerated. "They have put forward their suggestions and we will consider them," Chatterjee said. "But I don't think we can accept all their demands. Also we can't force anyone to play."

The AITA selection committee is due to meet on January 11 to pick the squad for the Korean tie.

Among the eight players supporting Devvarman's stance are senior players Mahesh Bhupathi and Rohan Bopanna, but former captain Leander Paes is not part of the group.

Trouble also erupted ahead of the London Olympics last year when both Bopanna and Bhupathi declined to partner Paes at the Games for what they said were personal and professional reasons.

The AITA had initially named the veteran duo of Bhupathi and Paes for the doubles, even though Bhupathi wanted to play with his then partner Bopanna.

QPR stun Chelsea, Everton and Liverpool on the up

LONDON – Chelsea old boy Shaun Wright-Phillips stunned his former club with a 78th-minute winner as bottom side Queens Park Rangers shocked the European champions 1-0 in the Premier League on January 2.

The 31-year-old drove home from the edge of the box at Stamford Bridge to move Harry Redknapp's side to within five points of safety and prevent Chelsea from reclaiming third place from Tottenham Hotspur.

"They worked their socks off and they got their rewards. We deserved it and it was a fantastic performance," said QPR manager Redknapp.

"They have set the standard tonight and to get out of this mess, they have to do it every week."

Newcastle United announced earlier in the day that they had accepted a bid for striker Demba Ba from Chelsea and last season's Champions League winners looked like they needed the extra fire-power against their London rivals.

Interim coach Rafael Benitez made five changes to his starting line-up, with Ashley Cole, Ramires, Juan Mata, Eden Hazard and the injured Petr Cech dropping out, and the changes were to prove costly.

German winger Marko Marin made his first league start for Chelsea but his only contribution of note was an ugly fourth-minute challenge on Stephane Mbia for which he was lucky to escape with only a caution.

Marin did tee up Victor Moses to shoot wide from close range early in the second half, while Julio Cesar saved brilliantly from Fernando Torres and Frank Lampard had a goal ruled out for offside, but Chelsea were below-par.

Punishment arrived with 12 minutes to play, when Adel Taarabt teed up Wright-Phillips to find the bottom-left corner from 20 yards and bring Chelsea's four-game winning run to a juddering halt.

"A lot of things went wrong today," said Benitez.

"We knew we were playing against the bottom-of-the-table side and we spoke about that. We knew we had to be focused but we did not have the tempo and some players may have been tired."

"It was going wrong against a side who played deep and were organised."

Meanwhile, Everton bolstered their bid for Champions League football by coming from behind to win 2-1 at Newcastle.

Papiss Cisse did his best to prove there is life after his Senegal team-mate Ba by heading Newcastle into a second-minute lead after goalkeeper Tim Krul's long kick was allowed to bounce on the edge of the visitors' box.

Leighton Baines produced a goal-of-the-season contender to equalise, however, rippling the net with a magnificent 30-yard free-kick that left Krul grasping at thin air. Substitute Victor Anichebe completed the comeback on the hour, tapping in Nikica Jelavic's low cross barely ninety seconds after coming on to send Everton up to fifth.

Liverpool reinvigorated their push for European football by sweeping Sunderland aside 3-0 at Anfield to climb two places to eighth.

Ahead of the weekend's FA Cup fixtures, Manchester United lead the table by seven points after winning 4-0 at Wigan Athletic on New Year's Day, while Manchester City remain second following their 3-0 win at home to Stoke City. —AFP

Perth Glory in talks with Owen

SYDNEY – Perth Glory are in talks with the management of Michael Owen about bringing the former England player to Australia's A-League, reports said over the weekend.

Owen, 33, who scored 40 goals in 89 internationals for England and had stints at Liverpool, Real Madrid and Manchester United, is currently playing for Stoke City in the English Premier League.

Glory have one spare position in their squad for an international player after releasing Irish striker Billy Mehmet last week and do not have a marquee player.

The West Australian newspaper said on January 5 that if Owen was recruited as the club's marquee player, his wages would not be included in the competition's salary cap.

A Glory spokesman confirmed the club was interested in securing Owen's services, but said negotiations were in their infancy.

"Michael Owen's agent has enquired about Michael playing in the A-League," the spokesman told the newspaper.

"Perth Glory are interested but are yet to find out Michael's terms and conditions."

"Until these are known, Perth Glory will not enter any further negotiations."

If Owen joins Glory he will become the fourth high-profile international player in this season's A-League, along with Italy's Alessandro Del Piero, Japan's Shinji Ono and England striker Emile Heskey. —AFP

Plaudits for AC Milan racism protest after walk-off

MILAN – AC Milan owner Silvio Berlusconi pledged last week that his team would walk off the pitch again to support a player who was victim of racist abuse by fans, as the move was widely hailed as setting a precedent against bigotry.

Italy's former prime minister, who is both president and owner of the club, spoke out on January 4 a day after German-born Ghanaian forward Kevin-Prince Boateng was heckled during a friendly by fans of Pro Patria and the Milan giants left the field in protest.

Boateng won plaudits for taking a stance against racist fans who blight the game, although some, including former Milan players Gennaro Gattuso and Clarence Seedorf, questioned his approach.

Berlusconi, however, said he would back his team if they walked off the pitch again whether in domestic or continental matches, calling the scenes at fourth-tier Pro Patria, who are based in Busto Arsizio, near Milan, "disgraceful".

"I can assure you that in every game, including [European matches], if we experience episodes of this nature we will, as a rule, leave the pitch," Berlusconi said, according to the Italian news agency ANSA.

Boateng said he would have no hesitation in walking off the pitch again if he suffered similar abuse in the future.

"I don't care what game it is – a friendly, Serie A or Champions League match, I'd walk off the pitch again and I think everyone would support me," Boateng told CNN.

"I'm surprised we're still hearing these things in 2013. It's not the first time in my life I've had to hear or see things like this but I'm 25 and don't want to take this anymore."

Footballers and sports commentators said Boateng's protest had highlighted a problem that has been tolerated for too long in Italian stadiums and which continues to dog some parts of the European game.

Damiano Tommasi, head of the Italian footballers' union Assocalciatori, told La Repubblica: "It's a strong, important signal that finally sets a precedent."

"It's good that it comes from first-rate players, who are usually accused of being less sensitive or less willing to make a stand."

Italian football federation (FIGC) president Giancarlo Abete said efforts were being made to identify the perpetrators, adding: "No matter what sanctions are imposed, nothing can cancel the disdain for such an intolerable episode.

"My complete backing goes to the players who were victims of racist chants and to Milan, who refused to continue playing – a decision that was shared by the referee, who had already suspended the match twice."

National team coach Cesare Prandelli, in charge when striker Mario Balotelli was racially abused by Croatia fans during last year's European championships, added: "Italy has to grow up and this is a first step."

Abete meanwhile said he had requested a meeting with Italy's chief of police to discuss when referees can suspend matches.

Anti-racism groups applauded Boateng, as did players including Senegal-born former France midfielder Patrick Vieira, who last year urged the football authorities to adopt a zero-tolerance approach in the fight to rid the sport of racism.

He said on Twitter: "It was brave of Kevin-Prince Boateng to do what he did and it was the right thing. We need to stand up and stand together. Well done."

Former Milan midfielder Gattuso, now with Swiss side FC Sion, however, suggested the incident had not been motivated by racist sentiment but instead by a "group of idiots".

"How many times have there been boos against white players in the past? It's happened to me too, but I brushed it off," he told Corriere dello Sport, adding that he lived near Busto which was "an area full of foreigners" and "no racists".

"Boateng felt offended, but I don't believe it was racism. It seems more to be the latest episode of collective idiocy from a minority." —AFP

Mancini downplays row with Balotelli

MANCHESTER, United Kingdom – Manchester City manager Roberto Mancini played down his row with Mario Balotelli and insists the striker still has a future with him by claiming he will give him another “100 chances” at the club.

The Italian pair was pictured grappling on the training ground in an apparent bust-up on January 3 in the latest in a long line of incidents involving the controversial striker.

Mancini took exception to a bad tackle from Balotelli on team-mate Scott Sinclair during a training match but the City manager played it down on January 4.

He claimed he asked the 22-year-old striker to leave the pitch after the tackle but when he refused the pair exchanged words in a heated argument that got physical.

Mancini admitted to losing his temper with the player but insists he has no regrets over the incident and does not feel like he has to speak to the player about it.

“It wasn’t a bad thing like are in the paper,” said Mancini. “The photo is worse than what happened.”

“We were playing a game and Mario kicked his team-mate and I said to him: ‘Go inside, leave the pitch’. He said ‘no’, and I take his shirt, I push him off the pitch.”

“This is what really happened, no fight. There is no fight. The pictures look worse. For two seconds, yes I lose my temper. Because he didn’t want to leave the pitch and he should leave.

“I will give him another 100 chances if it possible if I think he can change. I am here for this. Also if sometimes I am upset with him because he does everything for this.”

“I give him another chance, sure, because he is 22 and he can do a mistake.”

Mancini insisted it does not change Balotelli’s position at the club and he could still feature on the bench for City’s FA Cup third round clash against Watford.

“I have not spoken to Mario,” he said. “This does not change anything. This can happen, it usually happen between two players.”

“It was different, I wanted him to leave the pitch after what he done to the other player.”

While the pictures appear to show Mancini as the aggressor, it is the latest in a long line of controversial incidents involving Balotelli since his £24 million (US$38.5 million) move to City in 2010 from Inter Milan. – AFP

Armstrong may admit to doping, says report

NEW YORK – Disgraced cyclist Lance Armstrong, who was stripped of his seven Tour de France titles for doping, is weighing whether to admit he used performance-enhancing drugs, The New York Times reported last week.

Armstrong has told associates and anti-doping officials he is considering admitting publicly that he used blood transfusions and banned drugs during his cycling career in an effort to restore his credibility so he can become a competitive athlete again, the newspaper reported on January 4.

The Times did not name its sources but cited “several people with direct knowledge of the situation”.

The International Cycling Union late last year effectively erased Armstrong from the cycling history books when it decided not to appeal sanctions imposed on the American by the United States Anti-Doping Agency (USADA).

A damning report by USADA concluded that Armstrong helped orchestrate the most sophisticated doping program in the history of sport. The report included hundreds of pages of eyewitness testimony, emails, financial records and laboratory analysis of blood samples.

Armstrong has vehemently denied ever having doped.

Tim Herman, a lawyer for Armstrong, told the Times he was not aware of any admission plans.

“I do not know about that. I suppose anything is possible, for sure. Right now, that’s really not on the table,” Herman was quoted as saying. – AFP
