State Administration Council Chairman Prime Minister Senior General Min Aung Hlaing hears the report on academic and management measures of the Naypyitaw State Academy in Zabuthiri Township of Nay Pyi Taw Council Area on 1 July 2022

SELECTED arts and science subjects, economics, law, social, sports and medical subjects will be given to students at NSA, said Chairman of the State Administration Council Prime Minister Senior General Min Aung Hlaing in inspecting the construction of Naypyitaw State Academy (NSA) in Zabuthiri Township of Nay Pyi Taw Council Area yesterday afternoon.

At the meeting hall, Union Minister for Construction U Shwe Lay and Union Minister for Education Dr Nyunt Pe reported to the Senior General on academic and management measures of Naypyitaw State Academy, conferring of degrees, and establishment of relevant departments.

In his speech, the Senior General said the Naypyitaw State Academy project is being implemented on the site allotted for the former Sports University project which failed to be implemented. More buildings are added to the NSA project to have university characteristics.

The Senior General stressed the need to title the departments of the university in line with technical terms and work procedures used by other countries, adding that offspring of service personnel from Nay Pyi Taw and eligible youths from eight townships in Nay Pyi Taw must be selected as students for the NSA. Announcement for opening reception centres to receive CDM staff, students and youths

THE State Administration Council has been striving for the all-round development of the country including economic, social, education and health sectors. In addition, security forces are performing their duties day and night so that the entire mass of national people in various regions across the Union should be able to lead their lives and earn their living in the peace of mind. The State Administration Council gives priority to achieving genuine and perpetual peace, building up the united strength of the national brethren.

In order to prevent the unnecessary loss of human resources, the State Administration Council has publicly invited the basic education staff who are absent from duty to resume their duties and those who take part in armed resistance under various names of groups, including PDFs, to return to the legal fold if they wish to, and is systematically receiving the returnees.

It is found that, due to the persuasion, instigation and coercion of CRPH and NUG terrorist groups, some CDM staff, students and youths went to the strongholds of some ethnic armed organizations and received training in arms, ammunition and explosives.

It is known that some of those who have completed the training no longer want to be involved in terrorist attacks and so they fled to the regions within and without the country and are working there for their living. When they see terrorist attacks with their own eyes, they cannot accept such terrible acts at all. On the other hand, they have come to believe in the government's five-point roadmap and its endeavour for durable peace. Moreover, they want to live peacefully in their hometowns again with their parents and relatives. Nevertheless, they cannot do so because of the coercion and intimidation by CRPH and NUG terrorist groups and their subordinates, it is learnt.

Therefore, the government is taking measures to be able to open reception centres in border areas for those who would like to return homes to their respective regions. Moreover, those wishing to return home can contact Tatmadaw units and police stations. It is guaranteed that they will be able to lead their daily lives peacefully.

Myanmar strongly rejects unilateral decisions and conclusions adopted during the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference

1. It is observed that the decisions and conclusions against Myanmar were adopted respectively by the 345th Session of the ILO Governing Body and the Committee on Application of Standards during the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference (110th ILC), which was held in Geneva, Switzerland from 27 May to 11 June 2022 without the participation of Myanmar.
2. These decisions and conclusions were derived from the Report of the ILO Director-General on Development in Myanmar and the 2022 Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations. In this regard, Myanmar has already conveyed its observations to the respective bodies of the ILO. The reports contained excessive politically motivated elements rather than labour-related matters and they are not credible. The elements contained in the reports have heavily relied on distorted information and fabricated news, which are deliberately disseminated by the so-called labour activists. Accordingly, it is not surprising to see that the decisions and conclusions are largely politicized.
3. It is also observed that the ILO ignores the essence of the tripartite mechanism in implementing the Decent Work Country Program and in providing technical assistance without engaging the government. The ILO neglects the internationally-accepted principle of providing assistance at the request of the country concerned. The Government of Myanmar has been implementing activities to assist the workers and employers with tripartite nature.
4. The decisions also mentioned the Commission of Inquiry which was established in March 2022 and questioned Myanmar's compliance with the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No 87) and the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No 29). In reality, there are 2,892 Basic Labour Organizations; 162 Township Labour Organizations; 26 Region and State Labour Organizations; nine Labour Federations; one Labour Confederation in Myanmar with 190,000 members of such labour organizations. It is not true and appropriate to generalize that Myanmar is not upholding its obligations under Convention No 87 because of taking legal actions against a handful number of so-called labour activists for inciting the general public to commit violence and unrest.
5. In Myanmar, the National Complaint Mechanism on Eliminating Forced Labour of Myanmar (NCM) was established in 2020. The report of the ILO Director-General mentioned that since February 2021, the ILO received 13 individual complaints that are subject to further assessment while no cases have yet been submitted to the NCM. It is incomprehensible to learn that the ILO Liaison Office takes one and half years to submit the cases to the NCM. Furthermore, the allegations regarding the use of forced labour were made without verifiable information such as names of individuals, location and date of incidents.
6. For these reasons, Myanmar strongly protests and rejects the decisions and conclusions adopted at the 345th Session of the ILO Governing Body and the Committee on Application of Standards. Myanmar further reiterates its objection against the establishment of the Commission of Inquiry in the absence of the country concerned goes against the ILO Constitution.

Initiate all works in human society with cooperative essence

HUMANS cannot live alone, and humans must cooperate with each other in doing everything, especially in livelihoods to earn income for themselves as individuals and their families. Cooperative is based on activities of cooperation among the people to each other as well as one another for ensuring safety, security, sufficiency, solidarity, solving problems and so on. Thanks to cooperative efforts, all the work can be accomplished in a smooth process. Hence, all the persons need to taste the fruits of cooperative measures for their interests.

Although each person cannot do something alone through individual strength, many persons working in concert can easily implement assignments to have greater success. It can be identified as cooperative nature.

Likewise, cooperative societies need to join hands with each other in lasting their existence. Only if they can do so will they serve the people as well as their members forever. If so, the cooperative societies will build a better world as part of honouring and memorizing Robert Owen, the father of the cooperative movement.

inspired by the cooperative values of self-help, self-responsibility, democracy, equality, equity, and solidarity and the ethical values of honesty, openness, social responsibility and caring for others, is building a better world.

In Myanmar, various strata especially manufacturing organizations, production workplaces, and agriculture and livestock farms form themselves as cooperative societies to initiate the enhancement of the interests of the people and focus on the increase of production. Most cooperative societies in Myanmar are operating agricultural and livestock farming businesses to raise the products.

These societies need technical assistance and market occupation for their lasting. Mostly, cooperative societies based on agriculture and livestock farms require inputs such as fertilizers in addition to agricultural techniques, loans and feedstuffs. Only when prices of inputs are down, will their production cost decline. Consequently, the consumer can use the products at fair prices.

As such, people need to cooperate with each other in doing something. Likewise, cooperative societies need to join hands with each other in lasting their existence. Only if they can do so will they serve the people as well as their members forever. If so, the cooperative societies will build a better world as part of honouring and memorizing Robert Owen, the father of the cooperative movement.

Let Us Grow Older with Happiness

By Yin Nwe Ko

IN A restaurant at Pan Pacific Hotel, Yangon, a group of aged people gathered one day. They were the ex-students and ex-teachers from Bassein (Patheingyi) Arts and Science College (now it is Patheingyi University). They would have breakfast once a week. They do not need to pay the charges for the meal. The donor is also an ex-student who lives in Pyaw, Bago Region. It is interesting how he treats them every week. He is a wealthy man and saves countless numbers of cash in a private bank. The bank, in return, let him serve two guests in a restaurant they arranged for 3000 lakhs of saved cash every. You can guess how much cash he has saved there as there are always about seven or eight guests every week.

This week, the group including me and two ex-teachers of BASC were at the table in the restaurant. All of us were the age around 68 or 70 and our teachers were a few years older than we were. In other words, we all were aged people who were thinking about death. After the meal, while having a chat, one of my friends started talking about agism which was based on his experience. Then, the conversation became alive, and one of the ex-teachers who taught English in Thailand for 18 years discussed being aged. He said being aged can never be postponed and it is a thing that should be accepted happily.

He was a well-educated person holding a Master's Degree and could give us a detailed, reasonable and acceptable discussion. He said, "In our culture, youth — having perfect, wrinkle-free skin, being cool, and fashionable — is celebrated. Absorbing these cultural messages can lead us to feel worried, stressed, or sad about ageing. As soon as we see the first blemish, we may start trying to fix it. We may colour our hair, or do whatever we can to hide the signs for as long as possible. Yet, no matter what we do, deep down we all know that growing older is inevitable."

He continued, "Negative attitudes towards age are common in Western societies. The World Values Survey, analyzed by the World Health Organization, looked at attitudes towards the elderly in all age groups and found that the lowest levels of respect were reported in high-income countries. We may have subconscious negative beliefs about ageing that are not only hurtful to others but can impact our own wellbeing, too.

He pointed out, "Research published in The Journal of Gerontology: Psychological Sciences found that people with a negative view of ageing report lower levels of life satisfaction. They are also more likely to be hospitalized or to die young. What can we learn from cultures that do value the elderly? Ancient civilizations, like the pagans, worshipped a triple goddess. They recognized three different life stages of women - the maiden, the mother, and the crone. The crone was the last stage, after menopause. The crone represents wisdom and counsel, valuable skills that are of huge benefit to the young.

According to therapist Dr Linda E Savage, author of Reclaiming Goddess Sexuality, the crone years are a time of - giving back to society the cumulative wisdom of the years. Many women have an urge to speak out, to organize others. It is often crone energy that leads to changes being made in society. As the crone woman moves further into her life path, she feels the urge to teach others and cultivate her passions. It can be the most productive time in women's lives. - Another more positive impression of the elderly is found in Native American cultures.

Older generations are respected, and known as the 'Wisdom Keepers'. It is typical for elders to receive people's full attention when they speak. Wrinkles and stretch marks are seen as signs of wisdom, rather than flaws. As people get older, they may experience a slowing down, and a reassessment of values and ways of living. However, this doesn't mean that they lose their usefulness as human beings. Far from it. With more time to focus on what matters, people can hone their purpose, and spend time doing what brings them joy.

In the book, Our Wisdom Years: Growing Older with Joy, Fulfilment, Resilience, and No Regrets, Psychologist Charles Garfield tells how a hip injury forced him to slow down and reassess his values. After a lifetime of achievement and constant busyness, his injury allowed him more time for reflection. Garfield considers the later years of life to be ones in which the elderly can listen to their calling - something they've always wanted to do but hadn't had the time before."

Our teacher paused for a while and sipped a cup of green tea. We waited for the interesting experience he had learned. However, one of my friends seemed somewhat disagreeable with our teacher's explanation and came into the conversation. His opinion was not strange as he also viewed being aged and infirmity as an undesirable one. As infirmity, pain, and loneliness are inevitably faced by everyone, a person should leave the world before he or she did with them.

Our teacher listened to his view and never responded continuing, "Later life is far from unproductive but is a time when the opportunity to slow down and consider life can make choices and actions more meaningful and rewarding. Instead of considering old age to be dominated by body and mind falling apart, Garfield sees it as the time when the 'fruit' of our being ripened."

Garfield says: "What happens next after the flowers are gone, is the point of it all. The fruit within us ripens invisibly then; the sweet essence of ourselves that we're here to cultivate at this time of life. Our goal now isn't achievement or success for its own sake. It's to tend to this fruit, our wisdom, our fascinations, our kindness."

A positive attitude towards our later years can allow the self to come into full fruition.

However, the body's deterioration may be a reminder that death is always drawing closer, and part of the problem may be Western attitudes towards it. We tend to think of it as something taboo that we shouldn't talk about. Avoiding talking about death can mean that negative feelings prevent us from enjoying the later years to the fullest. There is much inspiration we can take from other cultures' attitudes towards ageing and dying.

The man who came into conversation said nothing about the cultures' attitudes towards ageing and dying. He frequently nodded his head and so did the other people in the group as we heard about the agism with the new aspect of the outside world. Our traditional view on 1. Birth, 2. Old age, 3. Revelation, and 4. Death is simple. Being aged is not an enjoyable one. However, the opinion of some people in the world is different from our tradition.

Our teacher kept his explation on. "In This Party's Dead: Grief, Spilled Joy, and Spilled Rum at the World's Death Festivals, author Erica Buist processes her father-in-law's sudden death by visiting death festivals around the world. Buist found that this way of carving out time on a yearly basis helped people to deal with their feelings around the death of loved ones, and their own mortality. Death was seen less as something to avoid, and more as a natural process.

In the UK we may not have death festivals, but we do have Death Cafes. This global movement was set up to break the taboo around death by inviting people to get together to drink tea, eat cake, and discuss death. "To share a fear is to remove its power," says Kate Brassington, organizer of a Death Cafe in Portland, Oregon. Taking some time to talk, connect, to focus on others, can mean that fear of death doesn't have to get in the way of your last years of enjoying life. You can find local death cafes on deathcafe.com, or set one up if there isn't one in your area."

reflect on your own attitudes towards ageing and dying can help you release any subconscious prejudices, and allow you to honour the real process of growing older. You could journal about your attitudes. How do you relate to the elderly around you? What subconscious beliefs may you be holding about your own ageing? How might growing older be framed in a different light? Just writing your thoughts can help you access your inner wisdom, and make a shift in perspective.

You could look around for books, movies, or TV programs that have a more positive view of growing older. Examples include the Netflix series Grace and Frankie, which follows two women starting over in old age, or the movie Best Exotic Marigold Hotel, in which all the main characters are older adults. Both these are comedies, and humour can be a wonderful way to laugh away the taboo of ageing and dying."

Our teacher had a deep sigh smiling.

Pipeline proposed to bury European CO2 off Norway

NORWEGIAN energy company Equinor unveiled Wednesday a project to build a pipeline to transport CO2 produced by industrial firms in continental Europe for burial offshore Norway. If it goes forward, the pipeline would be one of the largest carbon capture, transport and storage (CCS) projects in the world. CCS is looked at by business as a possible solution for CO2-heavy industries as a way for them to continue operating despite increasingly strict measures to reduce emissions to fight climate change. "The offshore pipeline is planned to have a transport capacity of 20 to 40 million tonnes of CO2 per annum, meeting an emerging need for CCS from multiple European industrial players," Equinor said in a statement. That is the equivalent of emissions from three to six million individuals in Europe.

Belgian energy infrastructure firm Fluxys will operate a terminal in Zeebrugge, which will collect CO2 from ships docking in the port and factories connected by pipeline.

Construction of additional pipelines to other industrial clients is envisaged.

The CO2 will then be transported via a pipeline under the North Sea operated by Equinor, which will store it permanently under the seabed off Norway.

The project is still in the feasibility stage. Equinor and Fluxys will now work with potential clients and hope to make an investment decision by 2025.

The project has "the potential to enable large-scale decarbonisation of European, carbon intensive industries," said Grete Tveit, Equinor's senior vice-president for Low Carbon Solutions.

Equinor is also involved in a project already underway to store offshore CO2 from a Norwegian cement factory and other industrial facilities.

In its latest baseline report, the United Nations said the world will need to capture and store CO2 from the air and oceans regardless of the rate at which countries succeed at reducing their greenhouse gas emissions.—AFP

California passes sweeping law to reduce non-recyclable plastic

GARBAGE be gone: California Thursday passed an ambitious law mandating reduction of non-recyclable plastic by at least 30 percent in six years, while also placing responsibility on producers.

The measure is meant to tackle the persistent problem of plastic refuse -- in California, about 85 percent of plastic waste ends up in landfills, according to the CalMatters publication.

"California won't tolerate plastic waste that's filling our waterways and making it harder to breathe. We're holding polluters responsible and cutting plastics at the source," Governor Gavin Newsom said after he signed the

Earlier in the day the bill had passed the state Senate unanimously and had passed the Assembly the day before. The meas-

NEWS IN BRIEF

Aquaculture drives aquatic food yields to new high

THE amount of fish, shellfish and algae caught in the wild and farmed in aquaculture hit a record 214 million tonnes in 2020, the Food and Agriculture Organization said Wednesday.

Driven by a sustained surge in aquaculture, the new record is good news for a world facing price hikes and food shortages due to the war in Ukraine, disrupted supply chains, and inflation.

"The growth of fisheries and aquaculture is vital in our efforts to end global hunger and malnutrition," said FAO director Qu Dongyu.

But overfished oceans, climate change and pollution -- if left unaddressed -- could threaten that potential, the UN agency warned in its 2022 state of the world fisheries report.

"Aquaculture growth has often occurred at the expense of the environment," it said.

"Sustainable aquaculture development remains critical to supply the growing demand for aquatic food." —AFP

Services, manufacturing rebound in China after Covid curbs eased

CHINA'S factory and services activity picked up in June, official data showed Thursday, fuelled by the easing of Covid-19 restrictions in major cities such as Shanghai and Beijing.

The non-manufacturing Purchasing Managers' Index (PMI), a key gauge of activity in the world's second-biggest economy, defied expectations and surged to 54.7 points in June after three months of sluggish performance.

It was the first time since February that the reading was above the 50-point mark separating growth from contraction. It sat at 47.8 in May.

"As the situation of domestic epidemic prevention and control continued to improve and a package of policies... to stabilize the economy was implemented at a quicker pace, the overall recovery of our country's economy has accelerated," National Bureau of Statistics (NBS) senior statistician Zhao Qinghe said in a statement.

In particular, business activity in industries severely hit by the pandemic such as rail and air transport picked up in June, the statement said.

Construction activity also helped fuel the PMI boost.

But the "surprisingly rapid recovery in services" likely reflects a one-off boost from reopening, said Julian Evans-Pritchard, senior China economist at Capital Economics.

Manufacturing PMI rose to 50.2 points in June -- similar to analyst expectations -- up from 49.6 in May. As work resumed after Covid lockdowns, production and demand in the sector picked up and delivery times improved, according to the NBS.—AFP

ANA to resume flights from Beijing to Narita after 2-year suspension

All Nippon Airways Co. launched a project Wednesday in collaboration with Japanese all-girl pop group AKB48 to push young Asians to travel. PHOTO: KYODO/FILE

ALL Nippon Airways Co. said Thursday that it will resume direct flight operations from Beijing to Narita airport near Tokyo from 11 July, after being suspended for more than two years against a backdrop of the novel coronavirus spread.

ANA will only operate one-way flights from Beijing to Narita per week on Monday for the time being, as the Communist-led Chinese government has implemented its radical "zero-COVID" policy, including quarantining travellers from abroad.

Under China's tough restrictions, the direct flights from the Chinese capital to the city in Japan's Chiba Prefecture would be suddenly suspended again if a passenger tests positive for the virus, experts say.

From Narita to Beijing, the passenger planes will be used as cargo carriers. Since early 2020, when the outbreak began, China has suspended all direct flights between Beijing and every city in Japan with the aim of preventing the virus from entering the country. On Tuesday, China decided to shorten the centralized quarantine period for overseas arrivals from 14 days to seven days, given the characteristics of the highly contagious Omicron variant. With China easing some COVID-19 regulations recently as part of efforts to prop up the pandemic-hit tourism industry, it agreed with Japan to restart flights from Beijing to Narita, a source familiar with the matter said.—Kyodo

Museums in Shanghai reopen after COVID-caused closure

ART museums and galleries in Shanghai have been busy getting ready to reopen their doors after three months because of the COVID-19 outbreak.

Yuz Museum has been working with overseas collectors and agencies on the extension of the contract for borrowed artworks appearing in the exhibition of Yoshitomo Nara, the largest showcase of the Japanese artist's work in China. The event, originally scheduled to take place from 5 March to 4 Sept.

According to Sun Yuanchen, director of marketing and business development of the Yuz Museum, about 30,000 "early bird" tickets were sold before the museum was forced to close on 9 March due to the recent COVID-19 outbreak. Although the museum offered a refund, the majority decided to hold on to their tickets.

"As such, we want to extend the exhibition for as long as possible to make sure people can view it," says Sun.

The museum also introduced an online shop selling merchandise linked to featured artists during the lockdown as a means of connecting with art lovers.

"We wanted to reach as many people as possible, so we set a limit for each person to buy no more than two items. Even though no merchandise could be shipped during the lockdown in April and May, the sales were beyond our expectations. The buyers are from all over the country," says Sun.—Xinhua

Thailand supports multilateralism, Global Development Initiative

THAI Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Don Pramudwinai reiterated Thailand's support for multilateralism and China-proposed Global Development Initiative (GDI) and the "BRICS Plus" cooperation initiative.

"Thailand supports China's constructive role as a responsible major power in contributing to global peace, stability and sustainable development. The GDI and Global Security Initiative reflect China's endeavours to realize such goals," Don said in a recent written interview with Xinhua.

Don said Thailand's Bio-Circular-Green Economy Model shares the same key concepts with the GDI, with both focusing on people-centred prosperity as well as a balanced, sustainable and inclusive growth, and there is much the two countries can collaborate on to achieve the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

"Thailand is pleased to have joined the Group of Friends of China's GDI," he said, hoping that "the shared values of openness and inclusiveness will be the building blocks for a more balanced global development partnership."

This came following the High-level Dialogue on Global Development, held via video link last week, during which Thai Prime Minister Prayut Chan-o-cha affirmed Thailand's support for multilateralism, the GDI and China's initiative on formalizing "BRICS Plus" engagement with emerging markets and developing countries.

Don spoke highly of China's leadership in safeguarding multilateralism, saying "practicing multilateralism is the only pragmatic path forward."—Xinhua

US prices high but stable in May, spending slows

A key US inflation measure showed price increases held steady in the 12 months ended in May, while consumer spending growth slowed sharply, a good sign in the battle against soaring prices.

The trend could offer comfort to consumers and central bankers alike, as a sign the Fed's aggressive interest rate strategy is starting to have an impact to quell the fastest surge in inflation in more than 40 years.

The personal consumption expenditures (PCE) price index rose 6.3 per cent compared to May 2021, still high but the same pace as in the prior month, even as it jumped 0.6 per cent compared to April, the Commerce Department reported Thursday.

The index jumped 0.6 per cent compared to April, much faster than in the prior month, but slightly below what economists had projected.

But spending edged up just 0.2 per cent, less than half the increase in April and part of a steady downward drift as consumers pull back amid surging prices.

Buoyed by a stockpile of savings, helped by massive government aid, consumers have been the lynchpin in the rapid US recovery from the pandemic downturn.

But strong demand clashed with global supply chain snarls and the world's largest economy has been battered for months by a cresting inflation wave, made more painful by the surge in energy prices sparked by the Russian invasion of Ukraine in late February.

Excluding volatile food and energy prices, PCE rose 0.3 per cent in the month, the same as in April, and slowed slightly to 4.7 per cent over the past year, the report said.—AFP

Vaccines, FTAs help boost Cambodia's economic recovery: World Bank

HIGH COVID-19 vaccination rates and free trade agreements (FTAs), namely the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP) and the Cambodia-China FTA (CCFTA), have been helping boost Cambodia's economic recovery, said a World Bank economic update report released on Thursday. Cambodia's economy will grow by 4.5 per cent in 2022 and around 6 per cent annually for the medium term, the report said. However, rising global energy and food prices are expected to fuel the country's inflation to 7.2 per cent this year, up from 3.5 per cent last year.

The Southeast Asian nation has so far administered

COVID-19 vaccines to almost 15.1 million people, or 94.3 per cent of its 16-million population, and China's Sinovac and Sinopharm vaccines have been widely used in the kingdom's immunization programme.

Buoyed by its high vaccination coverage, Cambodia has resumed all socio-economic activities and reopened its borders to fully vaccinated travellers without quarantine since November last year.

"The government's living with COVID-19 strategy has allowed Cambodia to reopen, enabling economic recovery," Maryam Salim, World Bank country manager for Cambodia, said during the launch of the report.—Xinhua

Colombia's Petro picks experienced economist as finance minister

COLOMBIA'S leftist President-Elect Gustavo Petro on Thursday named an economist with international clout and experience in former neoliberal governments as his finance minister.

Petro, Colombia's first-ever left-wing president, said on Twitter that Jose Antonio Ocampo will oversee his government's goal to "build a productive economy". Ocampo, 69, was executive secretary of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) from 1998 to 2003, and then served as deputy secretary general of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs until 2007.

He was a minister in two former neoliberal governments of Colombia in the 1990s.

Key among his tasks will be an ambitious tax reform with which Petro intends to narrow the government's fiscal gap and boost social spending by increasing taxes on the rich, who are not happy about the prospect.—AFP

Japan warns on ‘interests’ after Russia gas project decree

JAPAN’S energy “interests must not be undermined”, Tokyo said Friday, after Moscow issued a decree transferring operations of a key oil and gas project to a new Russian company.

Japanese trading houses Mitsui and Mitsubishi Corp own 12.5 and 10 per cent stakes respectively in the Sakhalin-2 project, but the future of their investments appears uncertain after the Russian move.

The decree calls for the establishment of a new Russian operator and requires existing foreign shareholders to apply for the right to participate in the new firm, with Moscow deciding on their inclusion.

Japanese government spokesman Seiji Kihara said Friday morning that Tokyo was “closely examining the impact on liquefied natural gas (LNG) imports”.

undermined,” he added, declining to give further comment.

Later Friday, Prime Minister Fumio Kishida said the government did not think the decree “will immediately stop LNG imports,” on which Japan is heavily dependent.

“We think we need to carefully monitor how the decree will affect our contract,” he told reporters.

Japan’s economy minister meanwhile said Tokyo would look into alternative suppliers.

“In the mid-to-long term, we will do everything we can to ensure a stable supply of energy, including through alternative procurement from LNG suppliers other than Russia, buying from the spot market, and reducing demand when necessary,” Koichi Hagiuda told journalists.

He said Japan would also look into boosting renewable and nuclear energy, which remains controversial in the country after the 2011 Fukushima disaster.—AFP

Argentina’s black market dollar trade: illegal but part of life

IT is hard to come by but ever-present on the mind of average Argentines: the US dollar, whose value relative to the feeble peso is a barometer for an economy in crisis.

“Dollars! Change, change, doooollars!” The cries of unofficial money changers follow tourists, but also locals, down the streets of central Buenos Aires’ office district.

It is illegal, but part of life: These “arbolitos” (“small trees,” after the “green leaves” they sprout) offer a black market rate about double the official one.

“It is a service to the community... part of the normalcy of the country,” one arbolito told AFP on condition of anonymity.

These days one dollar gets its bearer about 236 pesos at the unofficial or “blue rate,” instead of 130 at an official currency exchange.

A year ago, the blue rate was 170 pesos to the official rate of 95.

The peso is Argentina’s official currency, but its high volatility means that dollar prices are quoted for big-ticket items from buying property or a car to renting an apartment or getting an expensive medical procedure.

To prevent a hemorrhage of foreign exchange reserves and stabilize the peso, Argentines have been prohibited by law since 2019 from buying more than $200 in greenback per month.

This, of course, fuels demand, and Argentines — also distrustful of savings accounts — hoard as much of the US currency as they can afford to buy on the streets.

Goods vendor Marcela Leiron said that “like an ant” collects food, she buys dollars, “from $20 to $50 per month, as much as I can.”—AFP

Europe stocks steady as eurozone inflation hits record high

EUROPEAN stock markets steadied Friday with traders having expected news of record-high eurozone inflation that reinforced expectations of an ECB interest rate hike this month.

On the upside, the haven dollar jumped one percent against the pound on rising expectations of a recession, while oil rebounded on tight supplies.

Eurozone inflation accelerated to another record high in June, official data showed Friday, fuelled by fallout from the Ukraine war.

The EU’s Eurostat data agency said annual consumer price inflation in the 19 countries that use the euro soared to 8.6 percent in June, up from the prior record of 8.1 per cent in May.

“Today’s figures bolster the European Central Bank’s (ECB) intended decision to start raising interest rates at its next Governing Council meeting in July,” noted economist Pushpin Singh at research group CEBR.

The ECB stated last month that it will deliver its first interest rate hike in more than a decade in July to combat inflation.

Eurostat added Friday that core inflation — stripping out volatile components like energy and food — slowed to 3.7 per cent from 3.8 per cent, helping equities to calm heading into the weekend pause.

Earlier Friday, Asian stock markets closed lower after another Wall Street selloff. Data showing US consumers — the backbone of the world’s top economy — were growing increasingly reticent about spending dealt a fresh blow, with New York’s S&P 500 index suffering its worst first-half performance since 1970.—AFP

Portugal: Defence spending will meet 2% target if EU funds allow – PM Costa

The prime minister stressed that, during the NATO summit, Portugal reaffirmed that it intends to reach 2 per cent “during the decade”, reiterating that the country “does not like to make commitments that are not certain and secure”. PHOTO: WIKIWAND/ AFP

PORTUGAL'S prime minister said on Thursday that Portugal could “speed up convergence” towards the target of 2 per cent of GDP reserved for defence if Community funds were made available, committing only to reaching that target “over the decade”.

“Community resources are currently under discussion, in the framework of discussions [in the European Union] on security and defence policy. If these community resources exist, we can naturally accelerate convergence towards this goal,” António Costa said, in reference to the target of 2 percent of GDP reserved for defence, assumed by NATO Allies at a summit in Wales in 2014.

The prime minister was speaking at a press conference at the Madrid Exhibition Park, at the end of the summit of heads of state and government of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO). Costa said that since 2018 Portugal had clarified “in writing” that the pace of its convergence to “the target set in Wales of 2 per cent of GDP would necessarily be dependent on what is the framework of available EU funds”.

“In 2018, (...) in the debate for the Multiannual Financial Framework, it was expressly foreseen that there would be a fund for defence. Then, in the final agreement, on the Multiannual Financial Framework, that fund disappeared,” he recalled.

RUSSIA-UKRAINE CONFLICT

17 dead in southern Ukraine strikes, after Russia quits Snake Island

AT least 17 people were killed and dozens wounded Friday in missile strikes on Ukraine's Odessa region, a day after Russian troops abandoned positions on a strategic island in a major setback to the Kremlin's invasion. The news came after NATO leaders wrapped up a summit in Madrid, with US President Joe Biden announcing $800 million in new weapons for Ukraine.

“We are going to stick with Ukraine, and all of the alliance are going to stick with Ukraine, as long as it takes to make sure they are not defeated by Russia,” he said. Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov compared surging diplomatic tensions to the Cold War, telling reporters:

“As far as an Iron Curtain is concerned, essentially it is already descending... The process has begun.”

There was a glimmer of hope however, when Indonesian President Joko Widodo said he had given Russian President Vladimir Putin a message from their Ukrainian counterpart, Volodymyr Zelensky.

It came after Widodo visited both Moscow and Kyiv. Neither side has revealed what was in the note. Early Friday, missiles were fired at an apartment building and recreation centre about 80 kilometres (50 miles) south of the Black Sea port of Odessa, which has become a strategic flashpoint in the conflict.—AFP

Russia says it has more than 6,000 Ukrainian POWs

RUSSIA is holding more than 6,000 Ukrainian prisoners of war, the defence ministry said Thursday, a day after the two sides swapped imprisoned soldiers.

“The total number of Ukrainian troops captured or who surrendered is more than 6,000,” Igor Konashenkov, a spokesman for the ministry, said in a statement.

On Wednesday each side received 144 detained soldiers.

Ukraine said 95 of its troops who returned home were those who fought in the Azovstal steel plant in the port of Mariupol, one of the war's bloodiest battles.

The Ukrainian defence ministry said most of the Ukrainian soldiers had been seriously wounded.

Konashenkov said of the troops returned to Russia: “near-

Russian gas crisis prompts Uniper bailout talks

ENERGY giant Uniper has entered into bailout talks with the German government as dwindling Russian gas supplies to Europe drove prices for the fuel higher.

“Uniper entered into discussions with the German government on possible stabilization measures,” the energy company said in an ad-hoc statement late on Wednesday.

The options available to the group included extending further credit lines from the public lender KfW or an equity investment in Uniper.

Russian energy company Gazprom reduced deliveries via the Nord Stream pipeline to Germany by 60 per cent in mid-June, attributing the move to a delayed repair.

The German government has dismissed Gazprom's technical justification for the cut, instead labelling it a “political” decision in retaliation for the West's support for Ukraine after Moscow's invasion.—AFP

US Supreme Court lets Biden end Trump-era immigration rule

THE US Supreme Court on Thursday gave President Joe Biden's administration the green light to end the so-called Remain in Mexico policy instituted by Donald Trump as part of his hardline approach to immigration.

Under the policy, some non-Mexicans who entered the United States illegally across the southern border were sent back to Mexico to wait while their immigration cases played out in court, rather than being detained or provisionally released.

Since the beginning of his term, Biden has been trying to wind down the policy as part of what he claims is a more humane take on immigration.

Advocates for migrants said the policy exposed asylum-seekers to dangerous conditions in Mexico as overwhelmed US courts slowly work through a backlog of cases.

Thursday's ruling in favor of the Biden administration was split 5-4, with Chief Justice John Roberts joining fellow conservative Brett Kavanaugh and the court's three liberal justices in the majority.

Roberts, who authored the majority opinion, argued that federal immigration law allows the executive branch to return asylum seekers to Mexico, but does not force it to do so.

"Congress conferred contiguous-territory return authority in expressly discretionary terms," the opinion states.

Women battle for seats in PNG parliament

WOMEN are fighting to get at least one seat in Papua New Guinea's male-dominated parliament when voting opens Monday in a mountainous, forest-clad land scarred by gender-based violence.

Prime Minister James Marape is fending off a challenge from his predecessor Peter O'Neill to lead this resource-rich but poverty-struck Pacific Island for the next five years.

Whoever wins, the new leader will need to cobble together a coalition government, say analysts.

Women, though, are hoping just to have a voice in the 118-seat parliament.

In the nearly 50 years since Papua New Guinea gained independence from Australia, only seven women have ever secured a seat, and not one in the last election in 2017.

"A lot of us really feel like we stand a great chance," said Sylvia Pascoe, one of 142 women among the almost 3,500 candidates in this election.—AFP

Taliban's reclusive supreme leader attends Afghan clerics' meeting

THE Taliban's reclusive supreme leader Hibatullah Akhundzada showed up Friday at a major gathering of clerics in the Afghan capital called to rubber-stamp the hardline Islamist group's rule over the country.

Akhundzada, who has not been filmed or photographed in public since the Taliban returned to power in August, would address the gathering later, government spokesman Bilal Karimi tweeted.

His arrival, broadcast on state radio, was greeted with cheers and chants including "Long live the Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan", the Taliban's name for the country.

Over 3,000 clerics and elders have gathered in Kabul since Thursday for the three-day meeting, and Akhundzada's appearance had been rumoured for days -- although media are barred from covering the event.

He rarely leaves Kandahar, the Taliban's birthplace and spiritual heartland, and apart from one undated photograph and several audio recordings of speeches, has almost no digital footprint.—AFP

FBI adds Bulgarian 'Crypto Queen' to most-wanted list

A Bulgarian woman dubbed the "Crypto Queen" after she raised billions of dollars in a fraudulent virtual currency scheme was placed on the FBI's 10 most wanted list Thursday.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation put up a $100,000 reward for Ruja Ignatova, who disappeared in Greece in October 2017 around the time US authorities filed a sealed indictment and warrant for her arrest.

The 42-year-old, who is also a German citizen, was behind one of the most notorious scams in the frequently treacherous world of crypto currencies. In 2014 she launched OneCoin, ostensibly aiming to replace Bitcoin as the world's leading virtual money.

Tapping a global network to market the coin to friends and family in exchange for their own payouts, she and co-conspirators pulled in at least $3.4 billion and possibly over $4 billion, according to court documents. Officials said that OneCoin was not backed by any secured, independent blockchain-type technology as other crypto currencies are.—AFP

AMAZON has secured live rights to the Champions League in the UK for the first time from 2024. The technology giant will have the first pick of matches on a Tuesday, with BT Sport retaining the rest of the rights to the Champions League, Europa League and Europa Conference League.

The UK deal is understood to be worth around £500 million ($607 million) a year to UEFA for the three seasons between 2024 and 2027 — an increase of 20 per cent on the current cycle.

Amazon already holds the UK rights to 20 Premier League matches per season. "The addition of UEFA Champions League football is a truly momentous moment for Prime Video in the UK," said Alex Green, the managing director of Amazon Prime Video Sport Europe. A new format to the Champions League will begin in the 2024/25 season with the competition expanded to 36 teams and all clubs playing eight group games. The "Swiss Model" revamp will see the number of games in the competition overall increase from 125 to 189.

UEFA is aiming for total broadcast revenue from this cycle to reach $5 billion per season, up from the current $3.6 billion a year.—AFP
