Irrigation water essential for boosting crop production

The government is seeking all possible ways and means to supply adequate water essential for agricultural farming.

In order to meet the target, the government has been constructing dams, sluice gates, and underground water tapping stations. To be exact, so far, it has built 228 dams, 322 river water pumping stations and 7962 underground water tapping stations and rebuilt a large number of small dams and lakes. Those irrigation facilities benefit over 3.6 million acres of farmlands.

Bawdi Tahtaung Dam near Laygyun Sakkya Standing Buddha Image in Khatakkon Village, Monywa Township, Monywa District, Sagaing Division, was put into commission on 31 December 2009.

The Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation has been constructing dams in various sizes for economic growth, regional development, boosting production of crops, and regional greening, one of which is Bawdi Tahtaung Dam.

The dam contributes towards the greening of nearby regions, irrigates some 100 acres of farmlands, and supplies 30,000 gallons of irrigation water and potable water a day.

In response to the government's fulfillment of requirements for further improvement in the agricultural sector, farmers should work hard to boost agricultural production to enhance national economic development by efficiently utilizing irrigation water and choosing quality and high-yield strains of crops.

Palestinians reject US call for resuming peace talks

GAZA/RAMALLAH, 10 Jan — The Palestinian National Authority (PNA) on Saturday rejected a US call for resuming the stalled peace talks with Israel without preconditions, demanding a full settlement freeze in the West Bank and East Jerusalem. Meanwhile, Gaza Strip ruling Hamas movement warned the PNA against any resumption and cautioned that Israel will be the only beneficiary of the peace talks.

Chief Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat told Xinhua in a telephone interview that it is unacceptable, "since the US administration's calls don't include a total freeze of settlements in the West Bank and occupied East Jerusalem, and don't include a timetable for resuming the talks."

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton

on Friday said that the United States is working with Israeli and Palestinian authorities, as well as Arab states, namely Egypt, Jordan and Saudi Arabia, to resume the peace negotiations "as soon as possible and without preconditions." Clinton made the remarks after meeting Jordanian Minister of Foreign Affairs Nasser Judeh, adding that Washington is to renew its commitment and increase efforts in persuading the parties to return to the talks.

The two officials called on the Palestinians and Israel to tackle the thorny issues of borders and the status of Jerusalem first, saying resolving the two issues would automatically resolve the dispute over Jewish settlements in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, a major obstacle in the peace process.—Xinhua

Bomb explodes outside Greek parliament, no injuries reported

ATHENS, 10 Jan — A home-made time bomb exploded outside the Greek Parliament on Saturday evening in an unprecedented terrorist attack, which caused no injuries and only minor damage.

It was the first time a guerrilla group placed a bomb just 30 meters from the Parliament in the centre of Athens. Fifteen minutes before the blast at around 8 pm local time (1800 GMT) on Saturday evening, there had been a warning call to a local newspaper.

Police managed to evacuate the crowded Syntagma Square in front of the Parliament. Only the presidential guards standing at the nearby monument of the Unknown Soldier didn't evacuate the area.

Counterterrorist experts, who rushed to gather evidence from what was left from the explosive device and footage from surveillance cameras, estimate that the attack was meant to be mostly symbolic.

2008, after the fatal shooting of a teenager by police fire, have threatened with more attacks against political and financial targets.

The amount of the deal was not disclosed but the Spanish business paper eEconomista said it could be about 20 billion euros (28.5 billion dollars).

Iberdrola Renovables, the global leader in wind power, made the bid through its affiliate Scottish Power Renewables, which it acquired in 2007.

China overtakes Germany as biggest exporter

BEIJING, 10 Jan—China overtook Germany as the world's biggest exporter after exports rose in December for the first time in 14 months, data showed on Sunday, in a new sign of the rapid Chinese rise as a global economic force.

Chinese exports in the last month of 2009 jumped 17.7 percent from a year earlier, the state Xinhua News Agency and government television said. That made total exports for the year just over $1.2 trillion, ahead of the 816 billion euros ($1.17 trillion) forecast last month for Germany by that country's foreign trade organization, BGA.

Economists and Germany's national chamber of commerce said earlier it was likely to lose its long-time crown as top exporter. China's new status is largely symbolic but reflects the ability of its resilient, low-cost manufacturers to keep selling abroad despite a collapse in global consumer demand due to the financial crisis.

China's politically sensitive trade surplus shrank by 34.2 percent in 2009 to $196.07 billion, Xinhua said. That reflected China's stronger economic growth, driven by a 4 trillion yuan ($586 billion) stimulus, and demand for imported raw materials and consumer goods at a time when demand in the United States and other foreign markets is weaker.—INTERNET

Shanghai targets economic growth rate of 8% in Expo year

BEIJING, 10 Jan—Shanghai has set a GDP growth rate target for the year of more than 8 percent, almost the same as 2009's economic development rate.

Party Secretary Yu Zhengsheng yesterday announced the target at a one-day session of the Shanghai Committee of the Communist Party of China.

He added the growth rate of value-added output from the service industry should be much higher than the GDP rate. The city didn't set a higher GDP goal because it wanted to put more effort into restructuring the economy than simply seeking more GDP growth, Yu told the meeting.

The city's GDP growth was estimated to be more than 8 percent last year, a little lower than the average national level. Total retail sales of consumer goods rose by about 14 percent and growth of fixed assets investment was around 10 percent in 2009.

Yu said the targeted rate was a suitable development speed for Shanghai, which was hit by the global financial crisis during its economic restructure transition. He told the session that the World Expo 2010 Shanghai was the most important task for the government this year.

US warns of attacks on Uganda-Sudan planes

KHARTOUM, 10 Jan — The US Embassy in the Sudanese capital Khartoum has warned of a possible attack on Air Uganda planes. The embassy said it had information that US travelers faced a potential threat between Juba in Sudan and the Ugandan capital, Kampala. But the Sudanese Foreign Ministry said the threat was “not serious”.

Sudan is on a list of 14 countries where US-bound passengers will be subjected to extra searches following the attempted plane bombing last month. Other Sudanese officials said they had known of a potential threat for some time. The AFP news agency reported that one plane en route to Juba was diverted as a precaution.

In a statement, the US Embassy said it had “received information indicating a desire by regional extremists to conduct a deadly attack on board Air Uganda aircraft” on the Juba to Kampala route. The embassy said the “capacity of these extremists to carry out such an attack is unknown” but that the threat was “of sufficient seriousness that all American air travellers should be made aware”. AFP said an Air Uganda flight was returned to Entebbe airport in Kampala when it was ordered to return.

Annual 'stocktake' at London Zoo

At London Zoo, the animals come two by two — and sometimes in fours and sixes as well.

The zoo's annual “stocktaking” took place on Tuesday, giving keepers a chance to check on the numbers of everything from stick insects to tiger—and even a sex-change meerkat.

It was an essential opportunity to draw breath after a busy 12 months which saw a host of new arrivals, including the first two lion cubs to be born at the zoo for a decade.

Zoological Director David Field said: “It's a hugely important day. Of course we are monitoring the information right throughout the year, but today we make sure that all our figures are correct to make sure we know who is breeding with who and when.”

While the trio of giant Galapagos tortoises had a characteristically slow year, there was excitement in the meerkat enclosure with the birth of Lia and her brother Roo — only for Lia to become Liam five months later when she was found to be a boy.

“The gender of meerkats is often hard to establish immediately after birth,” said zoo spokeswoman Emma Kenly. “But it was a nice surprise for all of us when Lia ‘changed’ sex.”

Guns, knives recycled into 2012 Games sites

Knives and guns seized from London thugs are being recycled into building materials for the HYPERLINK “http://uk.news.yahoo.com/jc/london-2012-olympics.html” 2012 Olympic Games, police said.

London's Metropolitan Police said it collected more than 52 tonnes of scrap metal from guns, knives and old keys in the last financial year.

The force said the recovered steel, iron and other valuable metals were melted down and used in construction, with some of the materials going to the Olympic site in Stratford, east London.

“We're constantly looking for new ways to recycle and new markets for our recyclable materials, to conserve resources, save energy and money,” said spokeswoman Sarah Foster.

Strong quake strikes off California coast

SAN FRANCISCO, 10 Jan—A strong earthquake measuring 6.5 magnitude on the Richter scale hit off the coast of Northern California on Saturday afternoon, the US Geological Survey reported.

The quake struck at about 4:27 pm local time and was centered about 33 miles (53 kilometres) from Eureka, a city along the Northern California coast, according to information posted on the USGS website.

Coral reefs quickly create new species

BERLIN, 10 Jan—New species originated 50 percent more quickly in coral reefs than other tropical marine habitats during the last 540 million years, German scientists said.

Researchers at Humboldt University, Berlin, found coral reefs to be evolutionary "hotspots" that today are at risk from climate change, lead researcher Wolfgang Kiessling said.

"Our study shows that reefs are even more important than currently assumed. They are not only ecologically important for the marine environment, but also in an evolutionary sense," Kiessling told the BBC in a story published on Friday.

Kiessling, who likened coral reefs to rainforests in terms of enormous biodiversity, studied fossils dating to the Cambrian explosion to find the earliest evidence of animals that lived and died on the ocean floor.

The study, published in the journal Science, shows reefs are centers of marine biodiversity, said Carl-Gustaf Lundin, head of the marine programs at the International Union for Conservation of Nature.

Snow, freezing weather hit Europe, disrupt travel

LONDON, 10 Jan—Snow and freezing weather swept parts of Europe on Saturday causing travel chaos for thousands and forecasters predicted no let-up in Britain's harshest cold snap in 30 years.

Rail and air travel were disrupted in Britain, France and Germany. Eurostar, the rail service linking England and France, said it was running around two-thirds of its normal Saturday service from London. A spokeswoman for the train operator encouraged people not to travel unless the trip was essential. Forecasters in Britain said icy winds from northern Europe meant the big freeze felt even colder after temperatures fell overnight to minus 14 celsius (7°F) and even lower in some parts of the country. The Met Office said up to 20 cm (8 in) of snow could fall over the next 24 hours, with the southeast of the country hardest hit.

Internet

Travellers between Brussels, Paris and London faced more misery on Friday as the big freeze across northern Europe led to half of the cross-Channel Eurostar trains being cancelled. Early morning and late evening services have been shelved, leaving hundreds of people waiting in the cold at Paris's Gare du Nord.—INTERNET

Blinded to self by rose-coloured glasses

AUSTIN, 10 Jan—The more the brain's frontal lobes are used, the less a person sees through rose-coloured glasses, a US social neuroscientist says.

Jennifer Beer of the University of Texas at Austin says the more study subjects saw themselves in a positive light the less used were frontal lobes — the part of the brain associated with reasoning, planning, decision-making and problem-solving.

The study, published in NeuroImage, found subjects who had accurate views of themselves showed four times more frontal lobe activation than the most extreme "rose-coloured glasses" wearers.

"In healthy people, the more you activate a portion of your frontal lobes, the more accurate your view of yourself is," Beer says in a statement. "And the more you view yourself as desirable or better than your peers, the less you use those lobes."

Beer and colleagues used magnetic resonance imaging to scan the brains of 20 subjects as they answered questions about how they compared to their peers on positive traits — such as tact, modesty, likability and maturity — and negative traits — such as materialism, messiness, unreliability and narrow-mindedness.

At that time, the conclusion of the course was drawing near, and the trainees had learnt all the subjects.

The conclusion of Special Domestic Science Course No (2) took place at Ayeya Shwe Wah Hall in Mawlamyinegyun on 14 December, with an address by Minister for Progress of Border Areas and National Races and Development Affairs Col Thein Nyunt. Thirty boarders from storm-hit villages and 30 day trainees from Mawlamyinegyun, totaling 60 completed the course, which ran from 12 October to 14 December. At the conclusion ceremony, the trainees were found cheerful with the hope of better future.

In an interview, course instructor Daw Win Le Yee told the Myanma Alin, "The trainees have a better future ahead of them. I am very pleased with their conditions: they can run their own businesses with what they have learnt from the course."

First prize winner Ma Swe Swe Mon said, "I can't fine any words to express my happiness enough. I think I will run a tailoring shop in Zeebinzu Village. I will also make towels and cases to earn my living. I have a plan to run a multiplier tailoring course."

Second prize winner Ma May Ywet Wah said, "I thank the government and all the organizers for the course. I plan to open a tailoring shop in Danichaung Sanpya Village. I will make towels to earn money. And I plan to open a multiplier tailoring course there."

Similar ceremonies were held in Pyapon, Bogale and Labutta on 13 and 14 December.

Therefore, it is fair to say that the special courses organized by the Education and Training Department help improve the living standard of young women in the storm-ravaged villages, and contribute towards flourishing of traditional domestic science.

Pearl Harbour omission plagues calendar

LAKELAND, 10 Jan — The US grocery chain Publix said it is no longer offering a free calendar after being slammed for leaving the attack on Pearl Harbour off the publication.

Publix made the decision to no longer offer the 2010 calendar to customers after a Florida radio talk show host strongly criticized the supermarket chain for failing to note the 7 Dec, 1941, Japanese surprise attack that pulled the United States into World War II, the South Florida Sun Sentinel reported Friday.

Publix officials said at the apparent behest of Joyce Kaufman of WFTL-AM, a number of people complained to the company about the omission of the Pearl Harbour attack.

“We regret that the day of remembrance, Pearl Harbour, is not noted and as a result of customer feedback, we will add Pearl Harbour to next year’s calendar,” Publix spokeswoman Kimberly Jaeger said.

The 2010 calendar did note such international holidays as the start of the Islamic New Year, Puerto Rico Commonwealth Constitution Day and Haitian Flag Day.

The Sun Sentinel said Publix began offering the free calendars in 2005

Feds urge more H1N1 vaccinations

WASHINGTON, 10 Jan — Many US residents have yet to be vaccinated against the H1N1 virus and the flu season could continue until May, federal health officials said.

“This is a challenging flu season for millions of Americans and their families, and it’s not over yet,” Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius said in a release on Friday. Sebelius urged people to obtain vaccinations during this week’s National Influenza Vaccination Week, in which more than 130 events across the nation were to highlight the need for increased flu protection.

From April through mid-November, H1N1 flu infected an estimated 47 million US residents and caused nearly 10,000 deaths, said Thomas Frieden, director of the Centers for Disease Control. “We do not know how many more cases of flu there will be in the coming weeks and months, but we do know that the H1N1 vaccine is the best way to protect yourself,” Frieden said in the Health and Human Services release.

Scientists say Sierras are 50 mln years old

BERKELEY, 10 Jan— The Sierra Nevadas, the mountains on the California-Nevada border, are more than twice as old as previously believed, a group of geologists says.

Researchers from Yale University and the Berkeley Museum of Paleontology argue the mountains were at their current height 50 million years ago, the Los Angeles Times reports. Previously, the Sierras had been believed to be about 20 million years old.

Michael Hren, who led the study while he was at Yale, said the scientists were able to analyze the chemistry of the surface of leaves that grew on the mountainsides 50 million years ago.

They found some leaves had a higher proportion of deuterium, a heavy isotope of hydrogen, on their surface and assumed those grew at lower elevations because water drops containing deuterium would tend to fall first as clouds moved up.

Hren said the mountains then overlooked a warmer, lusher world.

“This is a time period where there would have been crocodiles in Wyoming,” Hren said.

Diane Erwin, another author of the study, said the research also provides new tools for working out the shape of ancient landscapes.

The study was published in the journal Geology.—Internet

‘Vog,’ pollution prompt warning in Hawaii

HONOLULU, 10 Jan — People in Hawaii should take precautions to protect themselves from air pollution plaguing the popular tropical tourist destination, health officials advise.

The Honolulu Advertiser reported on Saturday wildfires have polluted the air in the last month and, when combined with heavy so-called vog, air quality standards fell below acceptable standards twice in the first days of 2010. Vog is a term used for air pollution caused by gases from a volcano reacting to oxygen, moisture and sunlight.

The increased air pollution in Hawaii caused some residents with respiratory ailments to experience breathing problems and prompted complaints from others. “The smoke is really bad now,” Hawaii resident Karla Sachi offered. “The middle of the night and early morning, it’s so strong I think there’s a fireplace lit in the middle of my house.”

Starving pelicans rescued in Maryland

LEONARDTOWN, 10 Jan—Twenty-three starving pelicans that failed to migrate south have been rescued in southern Maryland during a bitter cold snap, officials said.

The birds were among 40 brown pelicans found suffering on the shore of St Mary's County, The Washington Post reported on Saturday.

Twenty-nine were captured and taken to Tri-

State Bird Rescue and Research in Newark, Del., where one pelican died and five more had to be euthanized.

The remaining 23 were to be kept in heated enclosures until spring, some receiving warm-water foot baths with Epsom salts for their cracked and swollen feet. Wildlife officials were to try to capture the rest of the stragglers in St Mary's this week.

Most pelicans migrate to the Carolinas and beyond for the winter, but this group of mostly adolescents stayed behind and clearly were suffering, said David Heilmeyer of Maryland's Department of Natural Resources.

"Just letting them sit out there and die is not an option for us," Heilmeyer said.— Internet

Two charged after Heathrow airliner security alert

LONDON, 10 Jan—A passenger has been charged with making a bomb threat which grounded a plane at London's Heathrow Airport on Friday night. Robert Fowles, 58, from Dover, Kent, was also charged with being drunk on an aircraft, the Metropolitan Police said. Alexander McGinn, 48, who is also from Dover, was also charged with being drunk on an aircraft.

Armed police boarded the Dubai-bound Emirates flight after remarks were made to cabin crew. Mr Fowles, who lives in Edred Road, Dover, will appear from custody at Westminster Magistrates' Court on Sunday. Mr McGinn, of Lowther Road, has been bailed and will appear at the same court on 22 January.

A third passenger who was arrested, a man aged 36, was released without charge, police said. The incident came amid heightened tension at airports across the world following an unsuccessful attempt to bomb an airliner on Christmas Day. The incident happened as the plane, which had 331 passengers on board, was taxiing for take-off.

The other passengers were eventually taken off the aircraft and driven to a hotel for the night. Their flight was rescheduled and departed on Saturday afternoon. Extra bag checks, body searches and on-board regulations have seen travellers in London experiencing longer waits before their flights take off, following the failed bombing of a plane en route to the US city of Detroit.

Regular exercise plus caloric reduction may achieve better health results

LOS ANGELES, 10 Jan—Combining regular exercise with cutting calories would achieve better health outcomes, according to a new study.

“It’s better to lose weight with a combination of caloric reduction and exercise rather than caloric reduction alone,” said study author Enette Larson-Meyer, an assistant professor of family and consumer science at the University of Wyoming.

Combining the two results in better health outcomes — such as lower blood pressure and cholesterol levels — than simply cutting calories alone, Larson-Meyer and his colleagues found in the study appearing in the January issue of the journal Medicine & Science in Sports & Exercise.

For the six-month study, the researchers assigned 36 overweight men and women, average age 39, to one of three groups. One group cut calories by 25 percent.

The second cut calories by about 12.5 percent and exercised enough to increase energy output by 12.5 percent. A control group simply stayed on a weight-maintenance diet.

At the study’s end, both the caloric-restriction group and the caloric-restriction plus exercise group lost about 10 percent of their body weight. The average weight at the study start was about 178 pounds, so the loss at the end was about 17 pounds on average.—Xinhua

Prostate cancer radiation may not hurt sex

PHILADELPHIA, 10 Jan—Sexual function in prostate cancer patients receiving beam radiation decreases within the first two years and then stabilizes, US researchers found.

Researchers at the Jefferson Medical College of Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia, the Thomas Jefferson University Hospital in Philadelphia and University of California, Davis, School of Medicine evaluated 143 prostate cancer patients receiving external beam radiation therapy who completed baseline data on sexual function before treatment and at follow-up visits. Senior author Dr Richard Valicenti of the University of California, Davis, School of Medicine, said patients were analyzed on sexual drive, erectile function, ejaculatory function and overall satisfaction for a median time of about four years.

The study authors found the strongest predictor of sexual function after treatment was sexual function before treatment and the only statistically significant decrease in function occurred in the first two years after treatment — and function then stabilized with no significant changes thereafter.

Education increases liver donations

NEW YORK, 10 Jan—Livers from living donors increase 42 percent after transplant candidates received education on the process, US researchers say. Officials of the United Network for Organ Sharing says as of Jan. 30, 2009, there were 100,539 candidates on the waiting list in the United States with more than 15,000 individuals in need of a liver transplant.

The number of deceased donors decreased from 6,650 donors in 2006 to 6,494 donors in 2007.

At the time of the study, New York state had 1,947 individuals on the liver wait list, which represents 12 percent of candidates nationally. In 2006-2007, random samples of wait-listed candidates at five transplant centers in New York were selected to complete pre-intervention surveys.

A second sample of wait-listed candidates completed post-intervention surveys in 2008. “Past studies have show wait-listed candidates concerns over donor safety, coupled with their general lack of knowledge about organ donation, created a reluctance on the part of candidates to discuss living donor liver transplantation with family and friends,” lead author Samantha DeLair, director of the New York Centre for Liver Transplantation, said in a statement.—Internet

Vaccine may ‘mop up’ leukemia cells

BALTIMORE, 10 Jan—A vaccine may help rid patients of leukemia cells left behind by chemotherapy, US researchers say.

Dr Hyam Levitsky of The Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions in Baltimore cautions the results are very preliminary and they cannot yet rule out other reasons for success, but a vaccine made with leukemia cells seemed to reduce or eliminate the last remaining cancer cells in chronic myeloid leukemia patients taking the drug Imatinib mesylate, or Gleevec. “We want to get rid of every last cancer cell in the body, and using cancer vaccines may be a good way to mop up residual disease,” Levitsky said in a statement.

The vaccine, which included the immune system stimulator GM-CSF and leukemia antigen molecules, was given to 19 patients who had measurable cancer cells after taking Gleevec for at least one year.

A series of 10 skin injections were given every three weeks. the process was repeated four times.

The study, published in Clinical Cancer Research, said after a median of 72 months of follow-up, the number of remaining cancer cells declined in 13 patients, 12 of whom reached their lowest levels of residual cancer cells. In seven patients, cancer cells became completely undetectable, the study said.—Internet

ROME, 10 Jan—Champions Inter Milan scored two late goals to stun rock-bottom Siena 4-3 at the San Siro on Saturday to open up an 11-point lead at the top of Serie A. Earlier in the day 10-man AS Roma moved up to fourth and the final Champions League qualification position with a 1-0 home success against woeful Chievo.

Inter looked to be heading for their first home defeat under Jose Mourinho as they trailed 3-2 with just two minutes remaining. But Dutch playmaker Wesley Sneijder curled home his second free-kick of the game and then three minutes into injury-time substitute Walter Samuel crashed home the winner to send the Inter faithful wild.

Roddick to face Stepanek in Brisbane tennis final

CANBERRA, 10 Jan—American Andy Roddick rallied from the first set down to beat Czech Tomas Berdych 1-6, 6-3 and 6-4 on Saturday for a final match against defending champion Radek Stepanek in the men's singles at the Brisbane International. Stepanek, also of the Czech Republic, had earlier cruised into Sunday's final with a 6-2, 6-1 win over Frenchman Gael Monfils.

"The biggest part of the match for me was the first few games of the second set. I just wanted to make sure I stopped his momentum," said Roddick. Berdych had a flying start, winning the opening set in 34 minutes by breaking Roddick's serve twice. But he failed to achieve the feat again for the remainder of the match. Roddick took the second with an early break, then broke again late in the third before serving out the match after more than two hours.—Xinhua

Arsenal indebted to supersub Rosicky

LONDON, 10 Jan—Tomas Rosicky salvaged a point for Arsenal with an added time equaliser to secure a 2-2 draw with Everton here on Saturday. The draw moved Arsene Wenger's side to within three points of Premier League leaders Chelsea.

It had appeared the Gunners were about to suffer their second home defeat of the season when Steven Pienaar fired the visitors into a deserved 2-1 lead with just nine minutes remaining at a snow-covered Emirates Stadium.

Everton's failure to turn a succession of draws into wins meant they came into this game having won just one of their last eight league matches although their form has been steadily improving in recent weeks.—Internet

Glover barely keeps his lead

KAPALUA, 10 Jan—Even with a three-shot lead at Kapalua going into the weekend, US Open champion Lucas Glover figured it would be tight. Surely, a few players in this winners-only field would post a low score, and a few guys wouldn't. He just didn't think he would be the one struggling to get by Saturday. Or that so many others would get into the hunt.

Glover went from a three-shot lead to a two-shot deficit in the SBS Championship, only to have his fortunes change as quickly as the direction of the wind. Three birdies over his last five holes allowed him to salvage a 2-under 71 and a one-shot lead over defending champion Geoff Ogilvy going into a final round with endless possibilities.

Ferguson tests FA's patience with new ref rant

BIRMINGHAM, 10 Jan—Sir Alex Ferguson may have landed himself in further trouble with the Football Association (FA) after his latest withering assessment of a referee. The Manchester United manager was furious with Mark Clattenburg for sending-off Scotland midfielder Darren Fletcher towards the end of the English champions' 1-1 Premier League draw away to Birmingham City here on Saturday.

Ferguson has only recently served a two-match touchline ban for criticising the fitness of referee Alan Wiley earlier this season and has a two-match suspended sentence hanging over his head from the FA. But that did not stop him from indulging in another spot of referee baiting at St Andrews following a match where a win for United would have seen them replace Chelsea at the top of the table.—Internet

Highway pileup kills five in central China

WUHAN, 10 Jan— At least five people were killed and seven others injured in a 11-vehicle crash in Hubei Province Saturday, a firefighting officer said on Sunday.

The pileup happened at around 10 pm Saturday at the Zaoyang city section of a highway linking Wuhan, capital of Hubei, to Shiyan city in the province, according to a publicity officer with the firefighting detachment of Xiangfan city that administers Zaoyang.

The accident involved four trucks, three passenger buses, three sedans and a mini-van. Five people were killed on the spot and the seven injured had been rushed to a hospital.

More than ten fire engines and some 70 firefighters were called on to the site. By 6:00 a.m. on Sunday when rescue operation ended, some 90 people had been evacuated from the site, mostly passengers. Investigators assumed that the slippery road covered by ice and speeding might be the causes of the accident, according to the officer who refused to be named. The highway section remained closed as of Sunday afternoon.

Further probe into the crash is still underway. Xinhua

Young women of storm-hit areas have better future

Byline & Photos: Arkar Kyaw

In compliance with the guidance of the Head of State, Domestic Science Course is conducted for young women in four storm-hit areas— Pyapon, Bogale, Mawlamyinegyun and Labutta townships. Now, the course is in its second batch.

It was on 12 December on which our team visited Special Domestic Science Course No (2) conducted by the Education and Training Department of the Ministry for Progress of Border Areas and National Races and Development Affairs at Mawlamyinegyun Township Peace and Development Council in Ayeyawady Division.

Just as we entered

Trainees making men's wear stiff collar shirts in Special Domestic Science Course No (2) in Mawlamyinegyun.

the training hall, we were greeted by course in charge Daw Win Le Yee saying, "It's just right. We will serve you the snacks trainees have made." I noticed the snacks were tasted even more delicious than commercially-made ones in shops.

Going round the hall, I was amazed by a variety of works in various colours, shapes and sizes, because they were very artistic. And I thought the works might not be the trainees'.

I turned to the course instructors, and said, "The works are fantastic and lovely, aren't they?" Daw Win Le Yee said, "The works are all theirs. They spend their time beneficially, and try hard in their studies because what they are learning now will be their livelihoods. They get on with their studies. That's why their works are fine." (See page 10)

A Powermat charges a cellphone, right, and small handheld computer, left, at the Consumer Electronics Show (CES) in Las Vegas, on 9 Jan, 2010. Powermat USA showed off a mat that charged gadgets set on top of it - as long as the gadgets were equipped with add-ons like special cell phone cases. This year, Powermat took things a step further by unveiling the Powerpack - a battery that replaces the one that comes with your cell phone and lets you charge your handset simply by placing it on one of its special mats. Powerpacks that are compatible with dozens of handsets are expected to be available for $40 in May.
