For greater development of auto industry

Industrial development is a giant step towards national modernization. Now, good foundations have been laid to turn into an industrialized country. Across the nation are many emerging industrial regions and zones along with a growing number of factories and workshops.

On an inspection tour of Magway Industrial Region the other day, Head of State Senior General Than Shwe gave guidance, saying in relation to the auto industry, "The government has to share auto technology with industrialists in the industrial zones, apart from running the auto industry itself. It also must provide assistance for industrialists till they get on with the auto industry."

Magway Industrial Region Project is ongoing at a place, southwest of Magway-Taungdwingyi Road, about six miles from Magway. Its main task is to manufacture vehicles. The region is in pursuit of the goal of taking the centre stage of the truck industry.

The number of high-tech factories in industrial regions is on the rise, one of which is Thagara Industrial Region in Yedashe Township, Bago Division. In the industrial region is a multipurpose diesel engine factory that manufactures generators and engines for vehicles and heavy machinery.

On completion, Magway Industrial Region will run auto industries in cooperation with auto-related factories in Thagara Industrial Region. The government, technologists and the people have to work together to achieve the goal in this regard.

The nation is making progress in number of modern factories and workshops, in addition to advanced technologies. It is, therefore, required to make sustained efforts to bring about technicians and technologists for further development in the industrial sector including auto industry.

One missing after US Navy plane crashes into Arabian Sea

MANAMA, 1 April—A crew member went missing but three others were rescued on Wednesday as a US Navy radar plane supporting operations in Afghanistan ploughed into the Arabian Sea, the US Fifth Fleet said.

The E-2C Hawkeye aircraft “was returning from conducting operations in support of Operation Enduring Freedom” when it malfunctioned, the Bahrain-based Fifth Fleet said in a statement. “Operation Enduring Freedom” is the name used by the US military for its war in Afghanistan.

The crew “performed a controlled bailout” from the plane, which was on its way back to the USS Dwight D. Eisenhower aircraft carrier on which it is based, when it went down in the northern Arabia Sea, the statement added.

Three crew members were “rescued, and they’re back on the USS Eisenhower,” an official told a news agency.

Drone attack kills six in Pakistan’s tribal area

ISLAMABAD, 1 April—A suspected US drone attack killed at least six people Wednesday in Pakistan’s North Waziristan tribal agency, local officials said.

Officials said that the drone fired two missiles on a militants compound in Miranshah area, the main town in North Waziristan.

North Waziristan, bordering Afghanistan, witnessed frequent attacks after a CIA base in Khost of Afghanistan was attacked last year, leaving six US intelligence operatives killed.

The attack was attributed to Haqqani network believed to be based in the area.

Three militant groups, Haqqani network, Taliban led by Mulla Omar and Hizb-e-Islami led by Gulbadin Hikmatyar, are blamed to be offering resistance to US-led forces in Afghanistan.

The Hizb-e-Islami agreed with Afghan government on talks for peace and reconciliation. But the other two groups are believed to be still active in the country. The United States blamed that pro-Al-Qaeda Haqqani network operates from North Waziristan.

Chocolate may be good for heart, blood pressure

BEIJING, 1 April —German researchers recently found having a moderate amount of chocolate may be good for blood-pressure control and therefore better protect the heart, according to a report published on European Heart Journal.

Researchers in German Institute of Human Nutrition conducted a study on more than 19,300 people.

Over a decade's study, they discovered that those who ate the most amount of chocolate, that is, an average of 7.5 grams a day, had lower blood pressure and a 39 percent lower risk of having a heart attack or stroke compared to those who had an average of 1.7 grams a day, the least among the subjects.

“Small amounts of chocolate may help to prevent heart disease, but only if it replaces other energy-dense food, such as snacks, in order to keep body weight stable,” said Brian Buijsse, leader of the study. But Buijsse warned those who may use the finding to indulge themselves with the sweets.

The researchers contribute the reason why chocolate seems to be good for people's blood pressure and heart health to flavanols in cocoa. Since dark chocolate has more cocoa, it is believed to have a greater effect.

Oil producers at risk of wasting investment due to low oil prices

CANCUN, 1 April — The world's oil-producing countries are now at risk of wasting investment if oil prices are too low or too volatile, Abdullah Al-Badri, secretary general of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), said on Wednesday.

Toad, earthquake forecaster?

BEIJING, 1 April—Researchers suggested Wednesday that toads may be able to forecast earthquakes, according to a study in the Zoological Society of London's Journal of Zoology.

The conclusion was based on the fact that days before a 6.3-magnitude quake hit Italian town of L'Aquila, the number of toads there witnessed a sharp decline.

Scientists from the Open University observed a sharp drop in the number of bufo bufo, a common type of toad at a breeding site in central Italy. A few days later, on April 6, 2009, the earthquake hit the town, causing death by hundreds.

Rachel Grant, one of the researchers, said the findings suggested "that toads are able to detect pre-seismic cues such as the release of gases and charged particles, and use these as a form of earthquake early warning system."

The number of toads at the site fell to zero three days before the quake, according to the study. The relations between unusual animal behaviors and cataclysmic events have always been suspected, but evidence recorded is few.

Roger Musson, a seismologist with the British Geological Survey said the new study was "another bit of data in the large pile that has been accumulating over the years. But it's not in any shape or form a breakthrough."

Indian space research organization may explore collaboration with Boeing

NEW DELHI, 31 March — The Indian Space Research Organization (ISRO) may explore entering into a collaboration with global aircraft maker Boeing after the latter showed interest in the field of communication satellites, a top official of the agency said on Tuesday.

"They (Boeing) said they are interested in having collaboration with us in the field of communication satellites.

But we (ISRO) already have an alliance with Europeans (EADS Astrium). May be some new areas of business we (ISRO and Boeing have to explore. We need to do a lot of homework before we could arrive at collaborative level.

Helicopter out of fuel during exercise

AULTBEA, 31 March — Members of the British Royal Air Force said a Coastguard helicopter and 50 rescue personnel were scrambled to seek a chopper than ran out of fuel in Scotland.

A Royal Air Force source told The Daily Record, Glasgow, Scotland, the Super Puma heli-

A Coastguard helicopter and about 50 rescue workers were scrambled to search for the helicopter in Ross-Shire county after it made an emergency landing near Loch Maree in Wester Ross.

The crew was found safe and the members chose to remain with the helicopter until it could be refueled the following day.

"There are some red faces over this one. It's a cock-up, plain and simple," an RAF source said. "The helicopter was supposed to have been following a road between Applecross and Aultbea, in Ross-shire."—Internet

Weight training injuries up 50 percent

COLUMBUS, 31 March — There has been an increase of injuries due to weight training of nearly 50 percent during an 18-year study period, US researchers said. Researchers at the Centre for Injury Research and Policy of The Research Institute at Nationwide Children's Hospital in Columbus, Ohio, found more than 970,000 weight-training-related injuries were treated in US hospital emergency departments between 1990 and 2007.

The study, published online in advance of print in the American Journal of Sports Medicine, found those under the age of 24 had the largest proportion of injuries and were usually injured when using free weights. However, the largest increase in the incidence of injuries occurred among those age 45 and older.—Internet

Plastic waste may be lethal to marine life

SHEFFIELD, 31 March — British scientists say they've determined plastic waste floating in the ocean can produce microbes that are potentially lethal to marine life.

The scientists from the University of Sheffield and Britain's Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science said they've shown the combination of marine microbes that can grow on plastic waste varies significantly from microbial groups that colonize surfaces in the wider environment.

That, said researcher Jesse Harrison from the University of Sheffield, raises the possibility plastic-associated marine microbes have different activities that could contribute to the breakdown of the plastics or the toxic chemicals associated with them.

"Plastics form a daily part of our lives and are treated as disposable by consumers," Harrison said. "As such, plastics comprise the most abundant and rapidly growing component of man-made litter entering the oceans."

But, he added, over time the size of plastic fragments in the oceans decreases as a result of exposure to natural forces. Tiny fragments of 5 millimetres or less are called "microplastics" and are particularly dangerous, Harrison said, since they can absorb toxic chemicals that are transported to marine animals when ingested.

Historic handgun returned to museum

CHICAGO, 1 April—A historic handgun stolen 62 years ago is back in a Chicago museum where it belongs thanks to an 83-year-old Pennsylvania gun fancier.

The 1851 Colt "Navy" revolver once belonged to Owen Brown, the third son of pre-Civil War abolitionist John Brown. It disappeared from the Chicago History Museum in 1948 only to turn up at a gun show in Pittsburgh in 1991. That's where it caught the eye of Robert Hassinger of North Hills, Pa., who traded another Colt for it.

It took him a while to track down the rightful owner, but once he did it went back to the museum in Chicago, even though it is worth $100,000-$250,000, the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette reported on Wednesday.

"I realized that it belonged to them and that it had to go back," he said.

That honesty drew the appreciation of museum collections director Kathleen Plourd.

"I can't really believe that it's resurfaced. You're an extremely honest person," she told Hassinger.

Hassinger called the revolver "a symbol of the development of this country" and said he'd like to see the gun go on display, something museum officials won't guarantee.

Solvent may change cooking oil production

KINGSTON, 1 April—A Canadian professor says a special solvent he invented might revolutionize the manufacturing of cooking oil.

Queens University Professor Philip Jessop says his solvent, when combined with carbon dioxide, extracts oil from soybeans. Industries currently manufacture cooking oils using hexane, which is a cheap, flammable solvent that is also a neurotoxin and creates smog.

The current manufacturing process, Jessop said, also involves distillation and that uses large amounts of energy.

The researcher says his new method of making oil involves a "switchable" solvent that is hydrophobic, meaning it mixes with oils and doesn't like water. But when carbon dioxide is added, the solvent becomes hydrophilic, meaning it mixes with water and doesn't like to be in oil. So, Jessop said, when carbonated water—carbon dioxide and water—is added to a mixture of the solvent and soybeans, the oil is extracted from the soybeans and collected. When the carbon dioxide is removed, the solvent switches back to its hydrophobic state.

While this process has only been performed in the laboratory, Jessop says he's already heard from cooking oil companies interested in his research. But the solvent is still years away from being used in large-scale oil manufacturing, he said.

Fish survives fall from the sky

MELBOURNE, 1 April—A Florida restaurant said a fish that fell from the sky and landed on an employee's windshield is alive and on display at the eatery's pond.

Angel Pacheco, an employee at Chameleón's sushi bar in Melbourne, said a worker was preparing to leave for the day when the fish landed on the windshield of his truck, WESH-TV, Orlando, Fla, reported on Wednesday.

"They brought him into the kitchen, put him in some water, he started flopping around and they said, 'Oh wow, we're going to have fresh sushi because we're a great sushi bar here,' and I said, 'Wait a minute. That's our lucky fish. That doesn't just happen every day. We need to put him in our pond up front so everybody can enjoy him,'" Pacheco said.

He told WESH-TV the fish, which has a dent in its head believed to be from the fall, appears to be swimming happily with the restaurant's other fish.

Ancient snakes found living in Madagascar

STATE COLLEGE, 31 March—US biologists say they are studying the evolution of blindsnakes, often mistaken for earthworms, by examining the genetics of living species.

Pennsylvania State University Professor Blair Hedges, along with Nicolas Vidal of the French Museum of Natural History in Paris, are co-leaders of a team that discovered blindsnakes are one of the few groups of organisms that inhabited in Madagascar when it broke from India about 100 million years ago, and are still living today.

The scientists said blindsnakes comprise about 260 different species and form the largest group of the world's worm-like snakes — scolecophidians. The burrowing creatures, found mostly in southern continents and tropical islands, have reduced vision — which is why they are called "blind."

Because there are nearly no known fossil blindsnakes, their evolution has been difficult to piece together, Hedges said.

In the recent study, the team investigated the evolution of blindsnakes by examining the genetics of living species.—Internet

Function loss after brain injury studied

LEIPZIG, 31 March—A German study suggests loss of physical and psychological function after brain injury isn't closely related to brain structure injuries, as had been thought.

Researchers at the Max Planck Institute for Cognition and Neuro Sciences led by Rainer Scheid and D Yves von Cramon said the loss of physical and psychological function after traumatic brain injury is, in Germany, more frequently caused by traffic accidents, falls or blows to the head than by strokes. And such loss of function is usually blamed on changes in brain structures. But Scheid and von Cramon analyzed data from 320 patients treated in the Cognitive Neurology Outpatient Clinic at the University of Leipzig between 1996 and 2007. They investigated whether the imaging, clinical and neuropsychological findings were correlated.

They discovered the most frequent findings were contusions, microbleeds, and atrophy. Magnetic resonance imaging revealed no visible changes in 49 of the patients examined.

Study suggests hormones may fight bacteria

DALLAS, 31 March—University of Texas scientists say the use of hormones, rather than antibiotics, might be a better way of treating food-borne bacterial infections.

The scientists from the university's Southwestern Medical Centre said pathogenic bacteria in the gut recognize their surroundings by detecting hormonal signals from the host, prompting them to express lethal toxins. Intercepting those hormonal messages could be a more efficient way to treat food-caused infections where antibiotics do more harm than good, they said.

The researchers, led by Associate Professor Vanessa Sperandio, said gut bacteria use a sensor in the bacterial surface to detect and respond to adrenaline released by the host.

That triggers a chain of events that can result in the production of toxins.

Sperandio's group identified a molecule called LED209 that stops adrenaline binding to the sensor, preventing signaling events inside the bacterium, reducing toxin production and hindering bacteria from attaching effectively to the epithelial cells that line the gut.

Bullies may be shy types

FAIRFAX, 31 March—US researchers suggest shy people who suffer social anxiety may aggressively act out as bullies — as children, bosses or romantic partners.

Psychologists Todd Kashdan and Patrick McKnight of George Mason University in Virginia say people suffering from social anxiety are often characterized as shy, inhibitive and submissive, but a subset of the socially anxious act out.

The study, published in Current Directions in Psychological Science, finds evidence a subset of adults diagnosed with social anxiety disorder are among those who tend toward violence, substance abuse and other risky behaviours.

"Parents and teachers might think their kid is a bully, acts out and is a behaviour problem because they have a conduct disorder or anti-social tendencies," Kashdan said in a statement.

Brucellosis increasing among some elk

BOZEMAN, 31 March—US Geological Survey scientists say brucellosis, a bacterial infection of cattle, elk and bison, appears to be increasing in northwestern Wyoming elk herds.

"Elk-to-elk transmission of this disease may be increasing in new regions of the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem, which remains the last reservoir for brucellosis in the United States," said Paul Cross, a USGS disease ecologist and lead author of the study. He said infected animals often abort pregnancies, and the presence of the disease within livestock results in additional testing requirements and trade restrictions.

Officials said several cattle herds have been infected in Wyoming, Idaho and Montana since 2004 and recent cases of brucellosis cattle are thought to have spread from elk due to the lack of contact between bison and cattle.

Rooney injury wait drags on for England and United

LONDON, 1 April — England and Manchester United's torturous wait for news of a scan on key striker Wayne Rooney's ankle injury stretched into Thursday, just 10 weeks before the World Cup in South Africa kicks off.

In a sight that England fans were dreading, Rooney limped off in the closing minutes of United's 2-1 Champions League defeat to Bayern Munich on Tuesday and left the Allianz Arena with his right ankle encased in a plastic boot.

Rooney had an MRI scan on the ankle Wednesday and fans are praying that it does not reveal serious damage and leave the 24-year-old facing the same desperate race for fitness he endured before the 2006 World Cup.

United manager Alex Ferguson sought to downplay the injury, saying: "I don't think it's terribly serious, but we'll wait and see." Despite no official word on the scan by early Thursday, reports speculated the results would not force Rooney to miss the World Cup.

The Sun and Daily Mirror newspapers said England's most important striker would be out for up to a month, meaning he would be fit in time for the tournament.—Internet

Fabregas fears he may not play again this season

LONDON, 1 April — Arsenal captain Cesc Fabregas fears he may not play again this season after suffering a serious leg injury in Wednesday's 2-2 Champions League quarter-final draw against Barcelona.
