Upgrade rural earth roads into gravel ones for all-weather use

The majority of the nation's population live in rural areas. As the rural economy relies mainly on agriculture, measures are being taken to ensure adequate supply of irrigation water and drinking water. With a network of irrigation facilities, cultivation of various crops have been extended and they are thriving.

Smooth transport is one of the basic requirements for economic growth of the rural people. So, inter-village roads and roads linking urban and rural regions have been built in large numbers, and earth roads have been upgraded to gravel ones.

Ahtaung-Mankya-Thitmathi-Thayagon-Mansatku rural gravel road in Kyonpyaw Township, Ayeyawady Division, was opened on 16 August. With the emergence of the new road, people from over 40 villages will be able to travel to Danubyu and Hinthada in a short time in any season.

Likewise, the gravel entrance road to Madaukbin village in Myaungmya Township was commissioned into service. As a result, the rural people from the township can travel in all season by using Myaungmya-Yangon road.

Moreover, three-mile Kyonpataw-Asugyi rural road have been upgraded. And there has been easy access to Pantanaw-Wakema road, enabling the rural people from 16 villages to travel to Yangon, Patheingyi and Pantanaw.

All in all, the economic and social conditions of Myanmar's rural areas have developed along with smooth transport, speedy commodity flow and irrigated crops.

Eight NATO service members injured as chopper makes hard landing in S Afghanistan

KABUL, 20 Aug— Eight service members of NATO-led International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) were injured as their helicopter which carried 19 people on board made hard landing in Taleban birthplace Kandahar Province in southern Afghanistan on Thursday, the military alliance said in a press release.

"The helicopter was involved in a joint Afghan and coalition operation when it made the landing. There were 19 people on the aircraft and all have been safely recovered," the press release added.

It confirmed that "eight coalition members were injured" and are being treated at an ISAF medical facility.

It said that coalition forces have secured the area.

The press release, however, ruled out any hostile fire and enemy activities in the incident, saying "Based on initial reports, the incident was not the result of enemy fire. An investigation into the cause of the incident is ongoing."

US forces' pullout not true: Iraqi figures in Syria

DAMASCUS, 20 Aug— Although the last US combat brigade was pulling out of Iraq, Damascus-based Iraqi figures said on Thursday that the pullout is a false one.

Chief of Iraq's Tribe Coalition Isam al-Bouhlala told Xinhua on Thursday that the US withdrawal from Iraq is a tactical step.

"This is a tactical pullout comes in conjunction with US congress elections. There is no real pullout and there is no independent Iraqi decision," al-Bouhlala said.

Al-Bouhlala, a prominent activist opposing to former Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, argued that the United States has come to the Middle East not only to topple Saddam's regime, but also to dominate the region, control energy resources and rearrange the region according to its own interest.

"The US administration has divided Iraq into sectarian and regional parts, which resulted in years of violence," he said. Meanwhile, Damascus-based Iraqi journalist Bassam Mahdi told Xinhua that the US pullout is a partial one as the US forces have left behind 50,000 troops who will play a noncombat role, in addition to US military bases and other military features in Iraq. "It is not a full pullout, it is a scheduled partial one based on an agreement between the US administration and the Iraqi government," Mahdi said.

"It is a formal pullout, and the Iraqi forces are incapable of preserving security and stability," he added.

Afghan militants leader captured; US troop killed

KABUL, 20 Aug—A deputy commander for an al-Qaeda linked militants group was apprehended in an overnight operation in eastern Afghanistan that claimed the life of a woman, NATO said on Friday. Separately, the coalition reported that a US service member died on Thursday in an explosion in the south, bringing to at least 18 the number of American troops killed so far this month. NATO did not release details about the death.

NATO said the deputy commander, who was captured by a joint Afghan and coalition force in Khost Province, ran weapons for the Haqqani network and reported directly to the group's senior leaders across the border in Pakistan. US officials have described the Haqqani network as the most potent threat to American forces in Afghanistan.

When the troops arrived at the scene, they saw two men running from the targetted compound to another nearby. They fired after seeing someone point a weapon out of a window. Inside the room, they found one woman dead and another with a minor injury. An AK-47 was next to the female victim and a rifle and another AK-47 also was found in the building, NATO said.—Xinhua

Ancient birds jabbed at prey with axelike beaks

WASHINGTON, 20 Aug—Ninety-pound birds that once lived in South America wielded their giant, sharp beaks in quick jabs, much like the boxing tactics of Muhammad Ali, according to a new study.

Originally dubbed terrorbirds because of their fearsome head, the flightless creatures were built to strike forward, attacking their prey with sudden jabs, researchers reported in the online journal PLoS ONE.

In other words, while the birds couldn't float like a butterfly, they could sting like Ali. "These guys were not sluggers, they couldn't go in and grapple with prey. They had to stand back and dance around and make hatchet-like jabs," Lawrence Witmer of the Ohio University College of Osteopathic Medicine said of the birds, officially known as Andalgalornis (an-DAHL-gah-lohr-nis). Its skull had a deep, narrow bill armed with a powerful, hawk-like hook. We found that Andalgalornis had turned mobile joints into rigid beams. This guy had a strong skull, particularly in the fore-aft direction, despite having a curiously hollow beak," said Witmer.

An engineering analysis showed that the bird was well-adapted to strike with its beak and pull back, but would have been badly strained had it tried to shake prey from side-to-side.

Also, it's hollow beak could be damaged by hard sideways shaking.

And while it's bite would not have been a quite as strong as that of a similar-sized mammal, it could compensate by using the beak like an axe, according to the researchers led by Witmer and Federico J Degrangue of Museo de La Plata in Argentina.

Humans didn't eradicate the woolly mammoth

SAN FRANCISCO, 20 Aug—Human beings have finally been exonerated in the until-now unsolved disappearance of the woolly mammoth.

Brian Huntley, a professor at England's Durham University, says his new study shows that the mammoth didn't disappear due to over-hunting, as has been argued.

Instead, it was because of a lack of food due to climate change and the widespread disappearance of grasslands from Western Europe, northern Asia, Alaska and the Yukon.

Huntley and his team found that the cold, dry conditions during the last ice age were perfect for grassland-areas where the large herbivores could graze.

"Those grasslands were replaced by forests over most of the area leaving only a very limited part of northern Siberia with any grasslands suitable to sustain these animals," Huntley said on Thursday.

"It grossly reduced the available habitat and the food resources available to the animals."

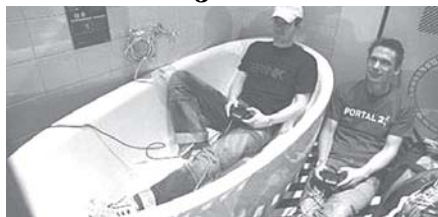

Eventually the beasts retreated to a small corner of Siberia before finally dying out about 4,000 years ago.

The giant deer, woolly rhino and cave bear are also believed to have gone extinct for the same reasons, Huntley said.

"If climate change and carbon dioxide increases that are happening now have the effect we think they are going to have in terms of changing ecosystems leading to habitat loss, then species extinctions are likely to follow if that is allowed to happen," Huntley said.—Internet

PlayStation 3 security foiled by jailbreak USB stick?

HONG KONG, 20 Aug—Sony's PlayStation 3 was long popular with the homebrew and tech-savvy gamer crowd, in part because Sony initially supported running Linux on the console. However, Sony removed Linux capability in a firmware update earlier this year, allegedly to staunch game and content piracy, and since then PlayStation 3 security has been garnering more than a little attention from enthusiasts and console modders eager to get back inside the console.

What can users do with PSJailbreak? Perhaps the most significant use of the product would be to copy games to the PlayStation 3's internal hard drive or other USB storage device. PSJailbreak can also enable users to run a range of homebrew applications.

PSJailBreak supposedly works with firmware 3.41 on all PlayStation 3 models, including the recent PlayStation 3 Slim. If the product works as advertised, it's a safe bet that Sony is working very hard on a firmware update that disabled PSJailbreak—as well as looking into any legal options it may have.—Internet

BSNL now free to buy Chinese telecoms gear

BEIJING, 20 Aug—The government had asked BSNL in May last year not to buy equipment from Chinese vendors for use in sensitive regions near the country's land border, citing national security.

Last month, the government revised telecoms licence rules saying telecom equipment vendors must allow inspection of their gear and made carriers solely responsible for the security of their networks.

"Accordingly, now BSNL may enter into agreement with foreign vendors for purchase of equipment/software/services," Pilot said, citing the revised rules, in a written reply in parliament to a question whether BSNL was barred from procuring equipment from Chinese vendors.

In June this year, BSNL invited bids to supply equipment for 5.5 million GSM lines, but excluded Chinese companies.—Internet

Many have definitely experienced sudden abdominal pain while running. This stomach ache force the someone to slow down or even stop running.

Common anaesthetic is anti-depressant ‘wonder drug’, says study

WASHINGTON, 20 Aug —Ketamine, a general anaesthetic usually administered to children and pets, is also highly effective in low doses as an anti-depressant, according a study published on Thursday.

Researchers at Yale University wrote in the 20 August issue of the journal Science that unlike most anti-depressants on the market which can take weeks to take full effect ketamine can begin to counter depression in hours.

“It’s like a magic drug—one dose can work rapidly and last for seven to 10 days,” said Ronald Duman, professor of psychiatry and pharmacology at Yale and senior author of the study.

The researchers noted that ketamine was tested as a rapid treatment for people with suicidal thoughts. Traditional anti-depressants can take several weeks to take effect, they noted.

About 40 percent of people suffering from depression do not respond to medication, and many others only respond after many months or years of trying different treatments.

The researchers found that ketamine improves depression-like behaviour in rats by restoring connections between brain cells damaged by chronic stress.

Thirteen workers have jumped to their deaths in the past year, raising concerns about conditions that have led to employees being overworked and mistreated. The company recently raised wages to offset the employees' needs for OT in order to support their families. Foxconn also hired counsellors and put up safety nets to discourage potential jumpers.

Meantime, thousands of young Foxconn workers packed a stadium in Shenzhen, China, on Wednesday for a pep rally of sorts, in an attempt to put the spate of suicides behind them. The facility in Shenzhen already employs 300,000 people and is home to most of the Foxconn suicides.

Pacific shake-up by double quakes in Samoa last year

The damaged building of the Development Bank of American Samoa is seen after a tsunami hit Pago-Pago, the capital of American Samoa on 29 September, 2009. A series of tsunamis smashed into the Pacific island nations of American and Western Samoa killing possibly more than 100 people, some washed out to sea, destroying villages and injuring hundreds, officials said on Wednesday.—XINHUA

WELLINGTON, 20 Aug—New research by New Zealand Institute of Geological and Nuclear Science (GNS) has found that the deadly tsunami that struck the Pacific last year was not caused by a single quake, as previously thought, but by a rare double earthquakes.

Global earthquake readings and GPS recordings from Samoa initially showed the 29

Sept, 2009 tsunami as a single "normal-faulting" 7.9 magnitude quake but just six weeks after the event, measurements from a small Tongan Island showed that there were in fact two large quakes that occurred within a couple minutes of each other.

Scientists have determined that the two quakes happened beneath the ocean floor about 70 km apart with one measuring 8.0 on the Richter scale and the other a magnitude of 7.9. Their findings was published on Thursday in the international scientific journal Nature.

GNS geophysicist John Beavan said on Thursday that it was pure detective work that uncovered the two earthquakes.

China hatches first emperor penguin

DALIAN, 20 Aug—An emperor penguin couple hatched their first chick in an ocean park in northeast China, a long way from their previous home in the Antarctic.

The hatching at Dalian's Laohutan Ocean Park in Liaoning Province was the first successful one in China.

The penguin chick was in good condition, according to the polar exploration department of China's National Bureau of Oceanography.

Under threat from global warming, the emperor penguin is the only penguin that solely inhabits the Antarctic. It is the largest of its species and can grow up to 1.2

The penguin chick hatched on Tuesday morning after 66 days of incubation, including five days in an artificial incubator when the couple deserted the egg.

During the incredibly harsh Antarctic winters, when temperatures drop below minus 50 degrees Celsius, a female emperor penguin lays only one egg and keeps it warm on the seice. Scientists know little about the hatching process.

Three laser beam attacks on Canadian aircraft so far this year

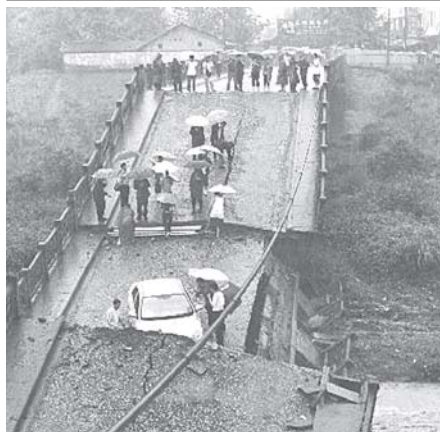

OTTAWA, 20 Aug—The Canadian authorities have confirmed that a laser beam was shone into the eyes of an Air Canada jetliner landing in Ottawa earlier this week, the third such attack so far this year. Transport Canada, the federal department that regulates air travel in the country, released a report on Wednesday saying that the Tuesday night attack was the second scare in the past week.

Despite the blinding flash of the light, the two pilots of the Air Canada airliner managed to land the A319 Airbus which was arriving from Vancouver on Tuesday night.

Investigators say the green laser beam flashed into the cabin when the plane was at about 2,300 metres high, making its descent. The beam shone into the cabin for about 10 seconds.

Last Saturday, a laser beam was flashed into the pilot cabin of a Sikorsky S76 air ambulance helicopter as it was ferrying a passenger to the city's main hospital. Investigators say the beam came from the Ottawa suburb of Constance Bay.

Picasso show draws huge crowds to NYC's Met Museum

NEW YORK, 20 Aug—Pablo Picasso is as popular as ever. An exhibition of 300 works by the Spanish modernist drew more than 700,000 people to The Metropolitan Museum of Art between 19 April and 15 Aug. That makes it the most highly attended show since 2001. The museum announced on Tuesday that "Picasso in The Metropolitan Museum of Art" was the seventh-most attended show since it began tracking exhibition attendance 50 years ago. It averaged 6,700 visitors per day.

The smash show featured paintings, drawings, sculptures and ceramics by the artist, who died in 1973. "Seated Harlequin" from 1901 and "The Actor" from 1904-1905 were among the masterpieces on view during the 17-week exhibition.—Internet

Divers to pull WWII plane from Calif reservoir

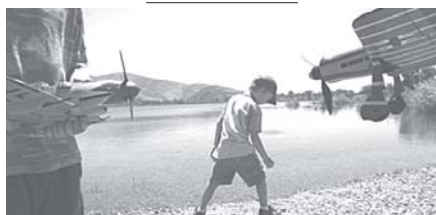

SAN DIEGO, 20 Aug—It was a surprising image for the fisherman hoping to find bass on his electronic fish finder: The outline of an airplane submerged 85 feet below the surface of a San Diego reservoir. Navy divers later confirmed it was a rare World War II dive bomber that crashed after its engine failed during a training exercise on 28 May, 1945.

The pilot and gunner aboard managed to ditch the craft and swim ashore to safety. But the plane remained at the bottom of the lake, forgotten for six decades until it turned up last year on the angler's device. Now private salvage divers have been slowly and gently clearing away the silt and mud covering the SB2C Helldiver. They hope to pull the craft out Thursday — 65 years after it plunged into the cool waters. If it can be restored, the National Naval Aviation Museum hopes the Helldiver fills a void in its collection, considered to be one of the world's largest displays of naval aviation history with more than 150 planes. "We've been looking for a Helldiver for quite some time," said Navy Capt Ed Ellis, of the museum in Pensacola, Fla.

Only a handful of the 5,100 dive bombers manufactured during World War II still exist.

Both Thawady and Thonze get annual average rainfalls from 80 to 100 inches. So, it was easy-going to grow monsoon paddy. ## Crocodile tips Australian PM to win elections

DARWIN, 20 Aug—A crocodile that picked the winner of the soccer World Cup has predicted Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard will be reelected.

The saltwater croc named Dirty Harry made his choice on Thursday in his enclosure in the northern city of Darwin when he snatched a chicken carcass dangling beneath a caricature of Gillard. Opposition leader Tony Abbott's chicken was left hanging.

Analysts say Australia's elections on Saturday could be the closest contest since 1961 when a single seat decided who governed. The crocodile used a similar technique to correctly predict that Spain would defeat the Netherlands in the World Cup last month. He joined an octopus named Paul in Germany, said to have correctly picked the winner for the final plus seven other games.—Internet

Fate of Universe revealed by galactic lens

LOS ANGELES, 20 Aug—A "galactic lens" has revealed that the Universe will probably expand forever. Astronomers used the way that light from distant stars was distorted by a huge galactic cluster known as Abell 1689 to work out the amount of dark energy in the cosmos. Dark energy is a mysterious force that speeds up the expansion of the Universe.

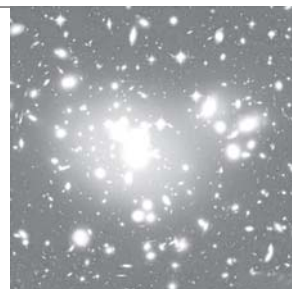

Understanding the distribution of this force revealed that the likely fate of the Universe was to keep on expanding. It will eventually become a cold, dead wasteland, researchers say. The study, conducted by an international team led by Professor Eric Jullo of Nasa's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in California, is published in the journal Science.

Authorities said a western New York man whose license expired 33 years ago has been charged with driving while intoxicated after police said he drove a van 11 miles without one of its tires. The Genesee County Sheriff's Office said another motorist reported seeing a tire falling off a van weaving on a road in Bethany late Monday night.

Deputies later arrested 61-year-old Duane Bush at his home in Bethany, 32 miles southwest of Rochester. Deputies said the van travelled 11 miles through the rural town without a rear right tire.

Bush was charged with aggravated DWI and unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle. Deputies said his blood-alcohol level was more than three times above the legal limit of .08 percent. Police didn't know if Bush has a lawyer and there is no phone listed for him.

Ky family claims they found dead mouse in milk

A Kentucky family has sued Wal-Mart, saying they found a dead mouse in a milk container the family had been drinking from for three days. The Courier-Journal reported that Robert and Rosalind Grant and their 23-month-old granddaug-hter sought medical attention and treatment in May after finding the mouse. The family filed suit in Jefferson Circuit Court on Monday.

Wal-Mart spokesman Phillip Keene said the retail giant takes quality and safety seriously and is looking into the complaint, along with the supplier, Ohio-based Superior Dairy Inc.

The Louisville paper reported that the child had blood in her stool from drinking the tainted milk.

The Grants claim they bought the milk 1 May at Sam's Club, which is owned by Wal-Mart, and the container had not been tampered with.

Attorney William Davis, who represents the family, described his clients as "completely shocked."

China plans to make more films, build theaters

BEIJING, 20 Aug—China said it will expand its movie industry by making more films and building more theaters to meet growing demand.

"So far this year, we have already matched the number of total theaters built last year, but we still have yet to meet the increasing demand," Zhao Shi, deputy director of China's State Administration of Radio, Film and Television, said at a news conference on Thursday.

The disaster drama "Aftershock" set the all-time box office record for a Chinese film with 532 million yuan ($79 million) in ticket sales earlier this month. "Aftershock" overtook the "The Founding of a Republic," which earned 420 million yuan ($62 million). China remains highly protective of its film industry and limits the country to 20 imports each year. James Cameron's 3-D sci-fi epic "Avatar" raked in $204 million this year.

Zhao said there are no plans to implement a ratings system for movies in China, since research has shown it has not been an effective method of preventing young people from watching certain movies.

Clijsters advances to WTA Montreal Cup quarters

MONTREAL, 20 Aug—Reigning US Open champion Kim Clijsters cruised into the quarter-finals of the two million-dollar WTA Montreal Cup by defeating Estonia's Kaia Kanepi 6-2, 6-1.
