PERSPECTIVES

Wednesday, 11 July, 2012

Four conditions

Normally we can say we are successful when we achieve what we want. And when we are recognized and well known by a lot of people we can say we are famous. So, success and fame are everyone's dream and wish. But unfortunately, not every dream comes true and not every wish is fulfilled.

Sometimes people turn to greed as a remedy for success and fame. But greed is an unstoppable intense and selfish desire sometimes hosting anger a feeling of hostility that eventually lead to tragic miseries when delusion is added to the mind already tainted with greed and anger.

In fact, most people embark on things they want to have in their lives. They set out to enhance their financial and influential power, improve their lives and achieve success or fame or both. Unfortunately, many of them are unsuccessful. They finish up continually running in circles, working harder, longer hours all in a fruitless effort to reach their goals. Some end up with a life that is completely out of balance, full of constant worry and stress.

Here we need self-confidence as it is of vital importance for the success and fame. Having the knowledge to express our self is helpful for achieving self-confidence. In addition we must have physical qualities for we should be fit and healthy and it is one the main requirements of success and fame.

According to Lord Buddha, there are four conditions for achieving success and fame, and they are: patirupadasavasa or living in a place which is favorable for the attainment of prosperity and merit; sappurisumanissaya or association with wise and noble persons; attasammpanidhi or living an honest life and striving for self improvement; and pubbecakapatunnata or having accumulated good deeds done previously. Of these, the last condition is vital because being endowed with it will contribute towards fulfilment of the remaining conditions.

Russia mourns flood victims, local officials blamed

Moscow, 10 July—Russia's emergency minister accused local officials on Monday of not doing enough to prevent 171 deaths in weekend floods that raised new doubts about the country's readiness for natural disasters under President Vladimir Putin.

Putin declared a day of national mourning on Monday and relatives were preparing to bury their dead in Krymsk, the southern mountain town that was worst hit by floods that caught many of the victims unawares as they slept on Friday night.

Refrigerated trucks held the discoloured bodies of some of the victims behind a hospital in Krymsk, where survivors gathered to identify the last of the dead.

Postmen in the badly damaged town of 57,000 people went from house to house, handing out sums of 10,000 roubles ($300), with the promise of more compensation to come. Many people were salvaging what they could from their sodden homes.

"Nothing is left. We are like tramps," said Ovsen Torosyan, 30. "I bought all the furniture and electrical goods on credit and still have to finish paying for them but they have all gone."

Putin, who was criticised for responding too slowly to national disasters early in his first spell as president, quickly flew to Krymsk on Saturday to show he was in control and ordered an inquiry into the high death toll.

Some residents say the wall of water that swept through Krymsk was so high that the gates of a nearby reservoir must have been opened. Emergency Minister Vladimir Puchkov has dismissed these suggestions but he said mistakes were made in failing to ensure residents were warned quickly enough. A criminal investigation has been launched. "According to a preliminary appraisal, warnings were made but unfortunately not all the work was carried out properly" Reuters

Cameron faces major rebellion over Lords reform

Britain's Prime Minister David Cameron speaks at the Farnborough Airshow 2012 in southern England on 9 July, 2012.—REUTERS

LONDON, 10 July—Prime Minister David Cameron faces one of the biggest rebellions of his premiership after more than a fifth of his own party threatened on Monday to vote against plans to reform parliament's upper chamber, the House of Lords.

The Conservative Party revolt also threatens to take a sledgehammer to Cameron's coalition government with the Lib Dems, whose push to make the Lords an elected rather than an appointed chamber is a key condition of the coalition deal.

At least 70 Conservatives signed a letter made public on Monday expressing "serious concern" over the proposals, which they say threaten to pile a "constitutional crisis on top of an economic crisis" as Britain tries to revive its ailing economy.

"I'm voting against the programme motion. I'm completely opposed to Lords reform. This bill is simply a means for the Liberal Democrats to blackmail the Conservative Party," Conservative MP Nadine Dorries told Reuters, adding that more than 100 other Conservatives shared her view.

The Lib Dems argue that an appointed upper chamber is undemocratic and that its aristocratic and privileged membership, resplendent in their scarlet robes fringed with ermine fur, is an anachronism.

"Right now we are one of only two countries in the world, the other being Lesotho, with an upper parliamentary chamber which is totally unelected and instead selects its members by birthright and patronage," Lib Dem leader Nick Clegg said.

EU gives Spain more time on deficit, sets bank aid

BRUSSELS, 10 July—Euro zone ministers agreed early on Tuesday to grant Spain an extra year until 2014 to reach its deficit reduction targets in exchange for further budget savings and set the parameters of an aid package for Madrid's ailing banks.

The decisions were aimed at preventing the currency area's fourth largest economy, mired in a worsening recession, from needing a full state bailout which would stretch the limits of Europe's rescue fund and plunge it deeper into a debt crisis.

"The Eurogroup supports the recently adopted Commission recommendation to extend the deadline for the correction of the excessive deficit in Spain by one year to 2014," ministers said in a statement.

No final figure was agreed for aid to ailing Spanish lenders, weighed down by bad debts due to a housing crash and recession, but the EU has set a maximum of 100 billion euros (79.26 billion pounds) and some 30 billion euros would be available by the end of July if there was an urgent need.

A final loan agreement will be signed on or around 20 July, Eurogroup chairman Jean-Claude Juncker told a news conference.

In one key decision closely watched by investors, ministers agreed that once a single European banking supervisor is set up next year, Spanish banks could be directly recapitalised from the euro zone rescue fund without requiring a state guarantee.—Reuters

Sword-wielding man shot dead in Malaysia PM's compound

KUALA LUMPUR, 10 July—Malaysian police shot dead a sword-wielding man who entered Prime Minister Najib Razak's compound on Monday, police officials said.

The man and a female companion, both carrying swords, tried to pass through a security post in the compound in the administrative capital Putrajaya in mid-afternoon, police said. Police opened fire at the couple as they brandished their swords and acted aggressively, one police official said.

The woman was also shot and was being treated in hospital for her wounds.

The police did not identify the couple or suggest a possible motive for their actions. Incidents of violence and intimidation have risen in recent months ahead of what is expected to be a closely fought election that Najib must call by March.

EU, Iran diplomats to meet for nuclear talks in July

BRUSSELS, 10 July—Senior diplomats from the European Union and Iran will meet on 24 July for technical talks on Teheran's disputed nuclear programme to try to salvage diplomatic efforts to resolve the decade-long standoff, EU officials said on Monday.

The meeting in Istanbul will be the second in a series of discussions to clarify technical aspects of Teheran's activity.

It follows an agreement by Iran and six world powers in June to use such talks to decide whether diplomacy tackling broader political issues should continue in the face of vast differences in views over the nature of Iran's nuclear ambitions.

"The objective for the meeting... is to look further at how existing gaps in positions could be narrowed and how the process could be moved forward," a spokesman for EU foreign policy chief Catherine Ashton said. Ashton is spearheading nuclear talks with Iran on behalf of the United States, China, Russia, Britain, Germany and France.

Without a deal, the stalemate over Iran's nuclear aspirations could boil over into a regional war that could destabilise oil markets and damage the fragile global economy.

In a series of negotiation rounds this year, neither side has been willing to budge. The six powers want Teheran to scale back its uranium enrichment, and in particular to stop refining the material to levels close to weapons-grade, because of their suspicions that Teheran wants to acquire a nuclear bomb.

Iran, which denies its work has any military dimensions, wants international sanctions lifted before it makes any concessions, and formal recognition of a right to enrich uranium. But the six are loath to make concessions before seeing evidence of Iranian willingness to address their concerns.—Reuters

Singapore to relax, but not remove, death penalty: Deputy PM

SINGAPORE, 10 July—Singapore's deputy prime minister on Monday said the country plans to ease its mandatory death penalty in some drug and murder cases but not abolish the ultimate punishment that human rights groups condemn as barbaric.

The wealthy Southeast Asian city-state, which has a zero-tolerance policy for illegal drugs and imposes long jail terms on convicted users, has hanged hundreds of people — including dozens of foreigners — for narcotics offences in the last two decades, Amnesty International and other groups say. That approach prompted science fiction writer William Gibson to describe Singapore as "Disneyland with the death penalty". But the government, reflecting changes in "our society's norms and expectations", will put forward a draft law by the end of this year to give judges more leeway to deal with certain drug and murder cases, Deputy Prime Minister Teo Chee Hean told parliament.—Internet

US scientist: Ocean acidity major threat to reefs

SYDNEY, 10 July — Oceans' rising acid levels have emerged as one of the biggest threats to coral reefs, acting as the "osteoporosis of the sea" and threatening everything from food security to tourism to livelihoods, the head of a US scientific agency said on Monday. The speed by which the oceans' acid levels has risen caught scientists off-guard, with the problem now considered to be climate change's "equally evil twin," National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration chief Jane Lubchenco told The Associated Press.

"We've got sort of the perfect storm of stressors from multiple places really hammering reefs around the world," said Lubchenco, who was in Australia to speak at the International Coral Reef Symposium in the northeast city of Cairns, near the Great Barrier Reef. "It's a very serious situation." Oceans absorb excess carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, increasing sea acidity. Scientists are worried about how that increase will affect sea life, particularly reefs, as higher acid levels make it tough for coral skeletons to form. Lubchenco likened ocean acidification to osteoporosis — a bone-thinning disease — because researchers are concerned it will lead to the deterioration of reefs.

Scientists initially assumed that the carbon dioxide absorbed by the water would be sufficiently diluted as the oceans mixed shallow and deeper waters. But most of the carbon dioxide and the subsequent chemical changes are being concentrated in surface waters, Lubchenco said. "And those surface waters are changing much more rapidly than initial calculations have suggested," she said. "It's yet another reason to be very seriously concerned about the amount of carbon dioxide that is in the atmosphere now and the additional amount we continue to put out."

Higher acidity levels are especially problematic for creatures such as oysters, because acid slows the growth of their shells.

Ocean acidification has emerged as one of the biggest threats to coral reefs across the world, acting as the "osteoporosis of the sea" and threatening everything from food security to tourism to livelihoods, the head of a US scientific agency said on 9 July, 2012.—INTERNET

Japanese inventor hopes "ro-butt" can develop communication

TOKYO, 10 July — The mechanical buttocks may look like a new low for the world of Japanese robotics, but they may actually mark a new leap into the future of humanoid development. Inventor Nobuhiro Takahashi programmed his creation, called "SHIRI" or "butt" in Japanese, to respond with different emotions to different human touches. Takahashi hopes to use the proto-type technology to develop responses which can be applied to other part of a robot's body, in particular the face, to help with non-verbal communication.

He decided to develop his technology with a rear end because a bottom's movements are large and make it easier to convey emotion. "I wanted to try and use a butt to reflect emotions - fear, joy and relaxation," the 24-year-old Takahashi, a graduate student at the Tokyo University of Electro-Communication, told Reuters. Robots are able to communicate with voices but have largely lacked the sort of non-verbal, physical responses that help power much of human communication. Takahashi hopes his technology can overcome that. To get a robot to show fear, Takahashi would use a hit, or in the case of the buttocks, a spank.

"Fear is a very human — very living — emotion, so it's expressed with force, with a spank," he said, speaking inside a black tent designed to keep light from damaging the silicon-coated invention. The robot bottom responds to a hit with quivering. A slow wobble is its default state, the sign for relaxation, while a gentle stroke brings clenches that Takahashi said signal pleasure.—Reuters

Samsung wins court case against Apple because it's "not as cool"

LONDON, 10 July — Samsung Electronics defeated Apple in the latest spat in the rivals' patent wars when a British judge ruled Samsung's Galaxy tablets did not infringe the US company's designs for the iPad because they were "not as cool". In Monday's High Court judgment Judge Colin Birss said that Samsung's Galaxy tablets belonged to the same family as the Apple design when viewed from the front, but the Samsung products were "very thin, almost insubstantial members of that family with unusual details on the back".

"They do not have the same understated and extreme simplicity which is possessed by the Apple design. They are not as cool," he said. "The overall impression produced is different." The victory for Samsung comes days after a US appeals court lifted a freeze on sales of its Galaxy Nexus smartphones, although it upheld a lower court's decision to temporarily halt sales of its Galaxy 10.1 tablet. The two companies are waging legal battles in about 10 countries, accusing each other of patent infringement as they vie for supremacy in the mobile device market.

Samsung welcomed the British High Court judgement, which it said affirmed its own intellectual property rights while respecting those of other companies. "Should Apple continue to make excessive legal claims in other countries based on such generic designs, innovation in the industry could be harmed and consumer choice unduly limited," Samsung said in a statement.

Apple said it had no comment on Monday's judgement, but it reiterated its view on the South Korean company's designs.

Biodiversity survey launched in Tibetan forest

NYINGCHI, 10 July — A group of researchers and photographers have started a 15-day biodiversity survey in the virgin forest of southwest China's Tibet autonomous region. The team will use cameras to record endangered species in Lulang Forest of Nyingchi prefecture in the southeast of Tibet, an area known for its rich biodiversity including all major vegetation of the northern hemisphere.

"We will trek to and around the Segrila Pass to take photos and notes of the plateau area's vegetation, birds, insects, amphibians, reptiles and mammals," explained Xu Jian, head of the expedition team, on Sunday. Xu said he hoped their findings would prove helpful for the local nature reserve administration and forestry authorities in their future conservation efforts. The survey was co-sponsored by two non-governmental organizations, the Biodiversity Image Survey to Tibet and the Images Bio-diversity Expedition. The two organizations carried out three similar biodiversity surveys in Tibet from 2010 to 2011.

They recorded more than 850 wildlife species in the Yarlung Zangbo River Grand Canyon and took photos of rare species including Zorotypus medoensis, a rarely seen insect, Asiatic wildcats and red gorals.—Xinhua

Dark matter bridges galaxy clusters

NEW YORK, 10 July — Dark matter is a big deal. The mysterious stuff makes up about a quarter of the universe, five times more than the ordinary matter of atoms and molecules. But we can't see it. We can't touch it. It's just out there.

But it's recognized by gravity. Big objects, such as galaxies, feel its gravitational tug. Galaxies such as our own Milky Way are believed to reside inside huge dark matter halos. And massive clusters of galaxies ought to be strung along filaments of dark matter, like pearls on a chain.

But those filaments are awfully hard to detect, being dark and all. Now a team of researchers reports identifying a dark matter filament joining two galaxy clusters. The astronomers used the technique called gravitational lensing to find the giant but invisible structure. They measured how light from the distant universe gets rerouted slightly by massive objects, like it's passing through a lens. Sure enough, there was an invisible bridge of massive stuff—dark matter—linking the galaxy clusters.—Internet

RIM marketing boss sees silver lining in BlackBerry delay

ONTARIO, 10 July — A delay in the launch of the new generation of BlackBerry's until next year will give retailers more time to focus on the revamped smartphones once they hit store shelves, Research In Motion Ltd's new marketing chief said on Monday.

In the latest upbeat salvo in a week-long media blitz from the embattled company, Frank Boulben said the launch delay from late 2012 to early 2013 — after the crucial

Christmas shopping season — would not be a death blow to RIM.

"The short delay is not detrimental if the quality is there when we launch early next year," Boulben told Reuters in a telephone interview on the eve of the company's annual meeting. "We will have much more attention and focus and ability to leverage our carriers." RIM, which has hemorrhaged market share to Apple Inc's iPhone and devices using Google Inc's Android software, has launched an unprecedented drive to win back lost faith over the last week, including a radio appearance by CEO Thorsten Heins where he said there was "nothing wrong" with the company.

Heins also published an opinion piece in The Globe and Mail newspaper in which he said the new BlackBerry, which the company insists will be better than anything now on the market, would

"empower people as never before." "We do not believe RIM is a company at the end," he wrote. "RIM is a company at the beginning of a transition that we expect will once again change the way people communicate." RIM, whose BlackBerry devices were long the must-have gadgets for lawyers, politicians and the business community, had been without a chief marketing officer for over a year until Boulben joined a month ago.

Flagging world economy
relying on unstable energy boost

LONDON, 10 July — As storm clouds gather over the global economy again at midyear, lower energy prices are one of the few flickering rays of light on the horizon — even if they too look increasingly ephemeral. Economic activity and business and household confidence around the globe has tailed off badly again in the second quarter. The headwinds remain fierce, from imponderables related to the latest wave of the euro crisis and European banks' retrenchment to US fiscal uncertainty and a spluttering of growth engines in the big emerging economies.

Friday's lukewarm US employment report for June and nagging doubts about the efficacy of latest measures to insulate the ailing euro zone have darkened the skies yet again. The International Monetary Fund last week flagged an imminent cut to its 3.5 percent 2012 global growth forecast, which is likely to at least reverse its modest 0.2 percentage point April upgrade.

And major central banks in the United States, the euro zone, China and Britain have all eased monetary policy again in recent weeks to ward off the growing chill — positive moves in and of themselves but also a sign of concern about the deteriorating outlook. One of the few remaining positives over the second quarter — or at least for the majority of countries that import oil — has been an almost $30 per barrel plunge in benchmark crude prices in just three months.

As the global slowdown pulled the demand rug from under the energy markets, the traditional stabilising effects of oil returned to the fray. So much so that year-on-year drop in oil prices is almost a whopping 20 percent. "The drop in oil is clearly one of the few hopes, even though everything is contingent on it being sustained and there are so many risks to that. Even then, you have to wonder whether any benefits just get swamped by relentless deleveraging," said Neil MacKinnon, economist at Russian bank VTB Capital.

over protectionism

JAKARTA, 10 July — IMF Managing Director Christine Lagarde on Tuesday said the global economic situation was worrisome and urged countries to be cautious of protectionism.

Lagarde described as "quite alarming" a report published by the World Trade Organization in June which said the world's trading nations were succumbing to protectionism in the wake of the global financial crisis.

Lagarde was speaking during a visit to Indonesia, Southeast Asia's largest economy, which she said was doing well citing growth above 6 percent and low public debt.

British Airways parent to issue bonds secured by airport slots

LONDON, 10 July — The parent of British Airways said on Monday it would issue its first secured bond, backed by its take-off and landing slots at Heathrow airport, as well as BA's routes between London City Airport and JFK in New York.

International Airlines Group hopes to raise 250 million pounds, but final terms and timing of the deal will be based on investor feedback and market conditions. The deal is the first secured financing transaction backed by airport slots to which Moody's has assigned a rating. The rating agency said in a statement that it gave the bond A3 grade and put a value of about 454 million pounds on up to 31 paired take-off and landing slots, assuming that 250 million pounds of bonds are issued.

Other assets backing the bond are two leased A319 narrow-body aircraft. The bond is being issued by a newly created subsidiary of British Airways, called British Airways Limited, IAG said in its statement. US airlines have used their airport gates as debt collateral for some time. From a vial of mom's blood, a fetus's entire genome

NEW YORK, 10 July — The days of pregnant women having a 3-inch-long (8-centimetre-long) hollow needle jabbed into their abdomens may be numbered. For the second time in a month, scientists have announced that a simple blood test, rather than more invasive tests such as amniocentesis, can determine a fetus's genetic make-up, identifying mutations causing any of about 3,000 inherited disorders that arise from a glitch in a single gene, such as cystic fibrosis.

Unlike a procedure unveiled last month, the one announced on Wednesday in the journal Nature can be done without knowing who the father is, much less obtaining a sample of his DNA. Since paternity is unknown or incorrect in an estimated 3 to 10 percent of births in the United States, the father-free method promises to make fetal DNA sequencing possible in every pregnancy, if hurdles including cost and accuracy are overcome. "We're really on the verge of an enormous increase in our ability to understand what an infant will be like," said Dr Michael Katz, a senior adviser to the March of Dimes, a foundation that supports research on pregnancy and birth defects. Katz was not involved in the study. "You'll be able to detect any kind of abnormality early, quickly, without distress and safely. This is the way of the future."

Determining a fetus's genome might give women more reasons to end a pregnancy. But it would also let physicians identify conditions that can be treated before birth or immediately after, said Stephen Quake of Stanford University in California, who led the new study: "The way it's done now, parents wait until a newborn gets sick and suffers in the first weeks of life, and only then does the doctor start figuring out the baby has a metabolic or immune disorder." With prenatal genetic testing, in contrast, the parents would know by the end of the first trimester (12 to 13 weeks) if the fetus has a genetic or chromosomal defect. That way, they can be ready if the baby has special needs, which can be as simple as a certain diet. — Reuters

fertility treatments

NEW YORK, 10 July — For women trying to get pregnant through IVF treatments, a new study finds that eating avocados and olive oil might boost their chances of success. Dr Jorge Chavarro and colleagues at the Harvard School of Public Health in the US looked at how intake of different types of fats affected success of IVF treatment in 147 women, mostly in their 30s.

Findings revealed that diets rich in foods typically eaten as part of the Mediterranean diet, including sunflower oil and nuts and seeds, tripled the chances of success for women having the fertility treatment. In contrast, women who ate mostly saturated fat, found in dairy products and red meat, produced fewer good eggs for use in fertility treatment. High saturated fat intake has already been linked to lower sperm counts.

The study was presented on 3 July at the European Society of Human Reproduction and Embryology in Istanbul. "The best kinds of food to eat are avocados, which have a lot of monounsaturated fat and low levels of other sorts of fat, and olive oil," said Chavarro. He said the study was small and more research is needed before clinical advice can be given to women. "While these results are interesting, this is the first time to our knowledge that dietary fats have been linked to treatment outcome in IVF." Another new study presented at the same conference found that women who reported drinking five or more cups of coffee a day at the start of IVF treatment reduced their chance of success by 50 percent. The Danish researchers described heavy coffee drinking as being "comparable to the detrimental effect of smoking." — Internet

Expensive, newer stents not better for all patients

NEW YORK, 10 July — Many heart patients get newer, pricey stents inserted during artery-clearing procedures, even if it's not clear they'd be worse off with more basic models, a new study suggests. Along with being more costly, so-called drug-eluting stents require patients to take aspirin and other blood-thinning drugs for a longer period of time after their procedure — which may mean they have to put off future elective surgeries because of bleeding risks, according to one researcher who worked on the report.

Some patients having a stent inserted are at high risk of having that stent get clogged up, requiring a repeat procedure. In those patients — such as people with diabetes or narrow arteries — drug-eluting stents can help prevent build-up in and around the stent and avoid future surgeries, said Dr

Robert Yeh, a cardiologist from Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. But in people whose stents probably won't get clogged up to begin with, old-fashioned bare-metal stents can work just as well at a much lower price, he said. "Non-diabetic patients who have bigger arteries and have very short blockages, their rate of restenosis can be quite low, even with bare-metal stents," Yeh told Reuters Health.

"Patients need to ideally know an estimate of their individualized risk of requiring a repeat procedure, and they need to know, what are the implications of the different stent choices they might receive?" For the new study, Yeh and his colleagues consulted data on 1.5 million patients having a stent inserted between 2004 and 2010 in the United States. Almost three-quarters of patients at very low risk of needing a repeat stent-inserting procedure received drug-eluting stents. — Reuters

With regard to the first question, at present, there is no plan to carry out major repairing for roofs of the Mabein Township Hospital in Shan State (North), and priority will be given to major repairing of the hospital depending on the allowed fund of the Ministry of Health in 2013-2014 fiscal year.

Concerning the second question, he replied that if the necessary factors are completed for opening of a station hospital on the opposite bank of Kyimyindine Township of Yangon Region, the head of Township Health Department is to submit it to the head of Yangon Region

Health Department. If the application is to be submitted together with the recommendation of the head of region Health Department, the Ministry of Health will adopt the decision in line with the rules and regulations.

With the increased production of electricity, extended construction of power grid and sub-power stations was carried out for the timely distribution of power.

Although there were limitations of power distribution in the past, power distribution was not limited when there was full power generation capacity. But, power was distributed to villages on once four day basis as an alternative power distribution system was carried out in the summer.

Towers of Shweli-Mansan 230 KV power grid were destroyed by the mines. So, there was a decrease of 200 Megawatts, and power could be distributed to Taungthaman village of Amrapura Township only one time per four days. But, power distribution time in villages was from 5 pm to 5 am daily as of 4 June on which more power could be generated. If there was sufficient electricity, power would be supplied to villages round the clock.

As standard power grid and sub-power stations could not be built in the past, there occurred more danger of electricity, lost of power and frequent repairs. In addition, due to the lack of perpetual maintenance and misappropriation of money, the committee was enforced to follow 24 points as disciplines, based on those factors.

The power distribution system was designated in advance to reduce the loads alternatively at times when there was no sufficient power generation. Those 24 points were disciplines designated for carry out village power supply systematically. Based

Statement No.(4/2012) of Myanmar National Human Rights Commission concerning incidents in Rakhine State in June 2012

A team from the Myanmar National Human Rights Commission, comprising the Secretary and two Members, visited Sittway, Maungtau, Buthidaung and Yathedaung Townships in the Rakhine State from 27 June to 1 July and held discussions with the responsible persons, religious leaders and the victims.

It is found that unexpected and unimaginable incidents occurred in the Rakhine State on 28 March and 3 June. The acts of violence that started in certain villages in Maungtau Township led to acts of violence between the two groups of people. On learning these incidents of violence, the entire population was grieved. The public, the Government and the international community expressed concern. Similarly, the Myanmar National Human Rights Commission was also concerned about the said violations of human rights. It was found that the loss and sufferings on both sides took a heavy toll on the victims not only physically but also mentally.

The Union Government and the Rakhine State Government have been taking measures setting up relief stations, 11 in Maungtau and its township, 57 in Sittway and its township, 4 in Yathedaung, totaling 72 stations. It was learned that relief stations are set up at 56 Buddhist monasteries, out of a total of 72 stations. All the Rakhine nationals from the relief stations in Buthidaung and Ponnagyun have been safely returned to their respective areas and villages.

It was noted that the basic needs of food, clothing, shelter and health of the victims at the above-mentioned relief stations are being met, relying on the availability of the contributions, foodstuff and materials being provided by the Union Government, the State Government, United Nations Agencies, International Non-Governmental Organizations (INGOs), Non-Governmental Organizations, entrepreneurs, artists and well-wishers. The Tatmadaw (the Armed Forces), the Police Force and the Border Immigration Headquarters are providing security for the respective areas and stations. It was observed that the stability and security are improving in the townships that the Commission team had visited.

In order to restore normalcy to the situation in the Northern part of Rakhine State, the following programmes are recommended for long-term tasks:

- the measures to build the rule of law be strengthened and just and effective actions be taken in accordance with law against the perpetrators of the acts of violence that had occurred;
- steps should be taken to build mutual trust for the physical and mental rehabilitation of the victims of the two groups of people;
- a special programme should be undertaken to enhance the basic education of the children in the affected areas for the building of mutual trust and enrichment of intelligence and knowledge.
- It is pleasing to observe that the basic needs of the victims from the affected areas are being met by the assistance and support extended by various organizations and well-wishers. In view of the continuing basic needs, it is urged that more assistance and support be provided.

K 10000 prepaid cards, low-cost handset in high demand

NAY PYI TAW, 10 July—Sales of prepaid top-up cards worth K 10000 are high demand at handset shops of Nay Pyi Taw Thabyegon Market, said a sale in-charge.

It was reported that demand of prepaid cards worth K 10000 is higher than that of K 5000 and K 30000. "Although about 10 prepaid cards were sold per day, now we sell 30-40 cards a day," said a sale in-charge.

Moreover, some shops raise the value of prepaid cards to K 10300 and K 10500 for K 10000 worth cards.

However, cheaper handsets are high demand. The phone users prefer low-cost handsets ranging from K 25000 to K 70000.

Amtrak plans 37-minute train from New York to Philadelphia by 2040

PHILADELPHIA, 10 July—Amtrak announced a $151 billion improvement plan on Monday that includes 37-minute trips from New York to Philadelphia at speeds approaching 220 miles per hour (354 km per hour).

However, the US passenger railroad will need substantial financial support from both state and federal governments to make its ambitious plan to transform rail travel in the Northeast a reality. The railroad predicted that super-fast train trips along the East Coast could be a reality by 2040. Travel times from New York to either Washington or Boston — both about 200 miles in distance — would also be slashed, to 94 minutes, the report said. Current travel times from New York to Philadelphia on Amtrak's sleek Acela trains are 1 hour, 15 minutes. Travel between New York and Washington currently takes 2 hours, 45 minutes and New York to Boston takes 3 hours, 41 minutes, according to Amtrak's website.

"The NEC (Northeast Corridor) region is America's economic powerhouse and is facing a severe crisis with an aging and congested multi-modal transportation network that routinely operates at or near capacity in key segments," Amtrak's President Joe Boardman said in a statement.

The traditionally cash-starved railroad is funded by Congress, where Republicans have been reluctant to finance prior plans to develop high-speed rail in the United States.—Reuters

US arms makers cite strong demand from foreign buyers

FARNBOROUGH, 10 July—Military budgets may be under pressure in the United States and Europe but there is growing demand from the Middle East, Asia and other regions for new fighter jets, helicopters and surveillance equipment, top weapons industry executives say. "We have probably our busiest air show as of right now," William Swanson, chief executive of Raytheon Co told Reuters in an interview on the opening day of the Farnborough International Airshow, the largest aerospace showcase in the world.

British Prime Minister David Cameron opened the show, where 83 trade and military delegations from over 43 countries got a firsthand look at new commercial and military aircraft, including Boeing Co's 787 Dreamliner, the European four-engine Typhoon and the V-22 Osprey, a tilt-rotor aircraft built by Boeing and Bell Helicopter, a unit of Textron.

Foreign sales account for about 25 percent of Raytheon's $25 billion in annual sales, said Swanson, who comes to the show every year to meet personally with foreign buyers, and can't understand why other defence companies are so focused on their domestic troubles.

"There's opportunities there. Don't sit there and go, 'Oh woe is me.' Look at it and say, 'Okay, where's the opportunity?'" Swanson told Reuters in an interview.

Even the US military market remained very rich, despite deep cuts in spending expected in coming years, he said. "They're still spending $500 billion dollars."

Northrop Grumman Corp, maker of the B-2 bomber and the Global Hawk high-altitude surveillance drone, stayed home this year, saying it preferred air shows in the Middle East and Asia, where most of the new demand for weapons is emerging. The Pentagon's chief weapons buyer, Frank Kendall, and Vice Admiral David Venlet, who runs the F-35 Joint Strike Fighter program, also skipped this year's arms and airplane bonanza, mindful of pressing budget problems at home. Chris Chadwick, president of Boeing Military Aircraft, said continuing uncertainty about the US budget had dampened the mood at the show, where rain clouds literally darkened the sky all day. German transport firms turn offshore headache into profits BRANDE, 10 July—Andreas Wellbrock is proud of his pontoon. The floating vessel transports gigantic tripods—reminiscent of rusty space rockets — through the harbour of Bremerhaven, a German port city located on the North Sea.

The tripods are foundations for offshore wind turbines and have to be shipped to wind farms being built off the coast. They are huge, some standing 65 meters tall—as high as the towers of London's Tower Bridge — and weighing as much as 950 tonnes, or 950 passenger cars.

"They're the biggest of their kind, so you need an elaborate mechanism to move them from A to B," says Wellbrock, who is in charge of wind energy logistics at firm BLG Logistics, and has helped to devise a special carrier to take the load.

He is hoping that his vessel — the first of its kind worldwide—will bring in ever more business, as offshore wind farms provide an increasing share of Germany's power supply.

Since its abrupt exit from nuclear power — announced by Chancellor Angela Merkel last year following Japan's Fukushima disaster—Germany has ambitious plans for its renewable energy sector.

Europe's biggest economy aims to derive at least 35 percent of its power from renewable sources in 2020 and 80 percent in 2050, from 20 percent now.—Reuters

Civil defence authorities aim for a million New Zealanders in earthquake drill

WELLINGTON, 10 July—More than 250,000 New Zealanders have registered to take part in the country's biggest ever earthquake drill later this year and authorities are aiming for 1 million.

The New Zealand ShakeOut drill, to be staged at 9.26am on 26 September, aims to teach New Zealanders to "drop, cover and hold" referring to the shelter technique in order to survive if they are caught in one of the country's frequent tremors.

The Ministry of Civil Defence is aiming to have 1 million people, almost a quarter of New Zealand's 4.43 million population participating.

"With more than two months to the drill we are well on the way to our target, but there is still a long way to 1 million," Civil Defence Emergency Management director John Hamilton said in a statement Tuesday.

"Along with many individuals and families, it is great to see companies registering and taking the opportunity to look at their corporate emergency preparedness."

Major companies, including dairy giant Fonterra and national carrier Air New Zealand, were registered to take part, he said.

"Everyone is welcome individuals, families, and organizations, big, medium and small and they are needed if we are going to have 1 million people involved."—Xinhua

Mitsubishi UFJ suspends two London traders on Libor probe

TOKYO, 10 July—Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group has suspended two London-based traders amid a growing investigation into the suspected manipulation of the Libor interbank lending rate. BTMU, a core commercial banking unit of Mitsubishi UFJ, Japan's largest lender, said the suspension was not related to work done for the Japanese bank.

Both of the traders worked at Dutch lender Rabobank before joining Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi UFJ, said a source, who was not authorised to discuss the matter publicly.

"BTMU is fully cooperating with authorities' Libor investigation. The stay-home instruction on the two has nothing to do with their work at BTMU," a bank spokesman in Tokyo said. He declined to comment further. Bloomberg named the men as derivatives traders Christian Schlupe and Paul Robson, citing a person briefed on the matter.

A Rabobank spokeswoman declined to comment on the traders. Investigators in the United States, Europe and Japan are examining more than a dozen big banks over suspected rigging of the London Interbank Offered Rate (Libor).—Xinhua

Indonesia ranks biggest IT spender in southeast Asian region

JAKARTA, 10 July—A new study by International Data Corporation (IDC) showed that Indonesia's Information Technology (IT) spending was the largest in Southeast Asian region and the world's 19th, local media reported on Tuesday.

Roger Ling, an analyst at the IDC, was quoted by Jakarta Post as saying that based on data from IDC, Indonesia spent 10.9 billion US dollars on IT in 2011 and the spending is expected to hit 12.9 billion US dollars by the end of this year, or 18.3 percent year-on-year growth.

"The bulk of the IT spending still goes on hardware, followed by services and then software. This tallies with the focus on infrastructure build-up in the country," Ling said.

Hardware spending in Indonesia reached 11.5 billion US dollars last year and is expected to rise to 17.8 billion US dollars by 2016. Meanwhile, spending on IT software and services stood at 522 million US dollars and 759 million US dollars respectively in 2011.

He pointed out that "a confluence of factors" had put Indonesia in the 19th spot, with the private and public sectors playing equally key roles in spending connected to IT services.

However, the notable increment in IT spending has not translated into improvement in IT penetration given that IT service penetration was still focused on Jakarta and the surrounding areas.

Smoky Mountain visitors recall violent storm

"All I know is that we were so lucky that day, because there were people who weren't as lucky," Ashley Hacker said. "It was fine, it was beautiful, and then it wasn't."

Two people inside the park were killed and two others died in Chattanooga when the winds overturned a double-decker pontoon boat on Chickamauga Lake. Several other people were injured.

Officials reopened a main road and several campgrounds Saturday at the popular Cades Cove section of the park, which is located on the Tennessee-North Carolina border.

Ashley Hacker was shaking as she retold her family's survival story. She said Noah had made his first cast when the winds began to howl. The family retreated to their car and they weren't more than 50 yards down the road when trees began to fall.

The branch that crashed through the extended sun roof tore their son's T-shirt, but he was not hurt.

"The branches were up against our car and there was more falling and people were trying to get to us but they couldn't, so I kicked and I kicked until I got the door open. If nothing else, I had to get him out of there," Ashley Hacker said.—Internet

Tom Cruise, Katie Holmes reach quick settlement for divorce

BEIJING, 10 July—Hollywood stars Tom Cruise, 50, and Katie Holmes, 33, reached a settlement on Monday, legally dealing with their divorce.

This happened only less than two weeks after Holmes unexpectedly filed for divorce, lawyers for the couple said.

The resolution was notably quick, particularly in Hollywood terms, saving the couple from a public battle that is sure to be covered vigorously by the media, which have already shifted into hyper-drive and, more evidently, money.

A drawn-out custody battle would have likely cost them more than a million dollars in legal fees.

In a joint statement, Cruise and Holmes asked for privacy for their family, including their 6-year-old daughter Suri.

Their representatives refused to elaborate on the agreement, saying only that terms of the settlement were confidential.

The next step would be for Holmes or Cruise to file to have their status changed to divorced, but that the actual financial and child custody details won't get filed in court unless there's some later dispute, said Steve Mindel, a managing partner in the Los Angeles firm Feinberg, Mindel, Brandt and Klein who has handled bi-coastal divorce cases.

Sweden to host Eurovision 2013 in Malmoe

MALMOE, 10 July—Sweden will host the 2013 Eurovision Song Contest in the southern city of Malmoe, the competition's executive producer said Monday.

Malmoe is Sweden's third-largest city and the contest will be held from 14-18 May in the 15,000-capacity Malmoe Arena, said Martin Osterdahl, the event's top producer for Sweden's public broadcaster SVT.

Sweden "has very big ambitions" and wants to make the kitsch contest "more dynamic and richer in emotion", he said.

According to the contest's rules, the winning nation at a competition hosts the following year's event. Singer Loreen wowed voters 26 May with her catchy techno-pop number "Euphoria" to claim Sweden's fifth victory. "It will be a family celebration for all of Europe. Malmoe, a multicultural city, is the ideal place for this international event," SVT head Eva Hamilton said in a statement.—Internet

South Korean tenor wins Vienna contest

VIENNA, 10 July—A South Korean tenor beat out 3,000 other up-and-coming opera talents Sunday to win first prize in the 31st annual International Hans Gabor Belvedere Singing Competition in Vienna. The bespectacled Beomjin Kim, 22, soared to the top with his rendition of Italian composer Gabriele Donizetti's "Tombe degli avi miei", pocketing a 7,000-euro ($8,600) cash prize in the contest aimed at pairing up young talent with industry contacts.

Fellow South Korean soprano Sang-Ah Yoon won third place, with South African soprano Hlengwe Mkhwanazi coming in second, at the top voice competition named after a former head of the Vienna Chamber Opera.

Following preliminary rounds in 50-some cities across the globe from March to June, the best 138 singers took the stage in Vienna in early July before being whittled down to the top 14 in Sunday's finals.

Along with her 3,500-euro second-place prize, Mkhwanazi, 26, won both the audience award and the media prize, each worth 1,500 euros. Sang-Ah Yoon, 24, went home with a 2,500-euro third prize.—Internet

Mancini signs five-year Man City deal

Italian manager commits his future to the Premier League champions

LONDON, 10 July — Manager Roberto Mancini has committed his immediate future to Manchester City after agreeing a new five-year contract with the Barclays Premier League club. The deal, which will keep the Italian at the Etihad Stadium until summer 2017, is Mancini's reward for guiding the club to their first Premier League title. City won their first title in 44 years in dramatic fashion by scoring two late goals to overcome Queens Park Rangers 3-2 in the final game of the season.

"I am delighted to be able to give all of my efforts to Manchester City for a further five years," Mancini told the club's official website. "The opportunity which exists to build on our recent success is enormous. Manchester City is a fantastic football club, from the owner, chairman, board and the executive team, through to the players, staff and fans. I am very much looking forward to the challenges and excitement ahead."

Interim Chief Executive Officer John MacBeath added: "Roberto's managerial credentials have been well proven in Europe for many years and in leading a team which has won the FA Cup and an unforgettable Barclays Premier League title in successive seasons, his ability to manage in the English domestic game is also undisputed."

"This new agreement allows Roberto to focus on the challenge of guiding a team which is capable not only of defending the Premier League title, but one which can compete for European honours." QPR sign midfielder Park from Man Utd

LONDON, 10 July — Queens Park Rangers have swooped to sign South Korea midfielder Park Ji-Sung from Manchester United. The 31-year-old midfielder has agreed a two-year deal with the Barclays Premier League club after signing for an undisclosed fee. "This is a real coup for QPR," said manager Mark Hughes, whose side narrowly avoided relegation last season. He told the club's official website: "We are delighted Ji is going to join us because his record speaks for itself. He has been a big player for Manchester United and

He is hugely respected there because of what he has achieved, his application to his work and the impact he has on games. He was always picked for big matches because they could rely on him, and we are going to reap all those qualities. "I think it's fair to say that Ji has been attracted not by where QPR are but where QPR are going. We were able to show him where we felt the club is going and he embraced it."

Park, who has become the second Manchester United player to join the west London club in the space of six days after defender Fabio joined on a season-long loan, spent seven successful seasons at United. The former PSV Eindhoven player won the Premier League title on four occasions, lifted the League Cup three times and also enjoyed FIFA Club World Cup and UEFA Champions League success. He has also scored in three successive FIFA World Cup finals tournaments.

"I am delighted to be here and be a QPR player," said Park. QPR is a club with huge history and tradition and a great ambition to achieve at the very highest level. "I am joining a club that is very much on the upward curve—a club that has a very bright future." "This project was simply too good to resist and I am excited about getting started in pre-season, and going on our tour to Asia in the coming days." — Internet

Goalkeeper Solo gets warning from anti-doping agency

NEW YORK, 10 July — National team goalkeeper Hope Solo tested positive for a banned substance found in her pre-menstrual medication and received a public warning for the violation, the Anti-Doping Agency (USADA) said on Monday. Solo, 30, tested positive for Canrenone as the result of an out-of-competition urine sample collected on 15 June but will not be ruled out of the 27 July-21 August London Olympics.

The prescribed medication is classified as a specified substance by USADA that can result in a reduced sanction. "I took a medication prescribed by my personal doctor for pre-menstrual purposes that I did not know contained a diuretic," Solo said in a statement. "Once informed of this fact, I immediately cooperated with USADA and shared with them everything they needed to properly conclude that I made an honest mistake, and that the medication did not enhance my performance in any way."

"As someone who believes in clean sport, I am glad to have worked with USADA to resolve this matter and I look forward to representing my country at the 2012 Olympic Games in London." Solo was the starting goalkeeper for the United States in their run to the gold at the 2008 Olympics and was a standout performer for the US team that reached the finals of last year's FIFA Women's World Cup. — Internet

From broken neck to breaking records for Vogel

ERFURT, 10 July — Without a cycling helmet, she would probably have been killed. Three years after surviving an horrific accident, German cyclist Kristina Vogel will arrive at the Olympics as the world team sprint champion and record holder. Her Melbourne world championship triumph was the 21-year-old's first taste of glory on the world stage and she will be battling alongside Britain's Victoria Pendleton and Australia's Anna Meares for Olympic sprint gold medal in London. It is all a far cry from 20 April, 2009, when she collided with a minibus while riding her bike near her home in Erfurt.

"A minibus took the right of way and I flew through the windshield," Vogel, who was 18 at the time, told AFP. "I am lucky I am not quadriplegic since I broke the fifth vertebrae in my neck on both sides." I also broke my cheekbone, bones in my hand, sustained a lot of deep cuts, especially in the face and lost six teeth in my lower jaw. I was in an artificial coma for two days, spent four weeks in hospital and was strapped to the bed for two and a half of them when I could only lie flat. "It took three months of rehab and I was off my bike for four months in total." But it wasn't hard for me to get back in the saddle. I couldn't talk at the time, so I wrote on a piece of paper that my goal was to race at the world championships the following March. "That was my motivation and challenge."

Back then, the plucky teenager fulfilled the promise to herself and finished fifth in the individual sprint at the 2010 World Championships in Copenhagen and along with partner Miriam Welte came sixth in the team sprint.

Federer ranks alongside Pele, Ali, says Murray

LONDON, 10 July — Wimbledon champion Roger Federer deserves to be ranked alongside Pele and Muhammad Ali as one of the greatest sportsmen the world has ever seen, according to beaten finalist Andy Murray. Federer swept to a 4-6, 7-5, 6-3, 6-4 victory over Murray in the final on Sunday as the Swiss great clinched the seventh Wimbledon title and 17th Grand Slam crown of his illustrious career.

The 30-year-old will also return to the top of the world rankings as a result of his latest All England Club triumph, strengthening Federer's claim to be labelled the greatest tennis player of all-time. But Murray believes debate about Federer's greatness shouldn't just finish with his own sport. The Scot, who is also a huge fan of Spanish world number two Rafael Nadal, is convinced Federer deserves to be mentioned alongside immortals like Brazilian footballer Pele, who inspired his country to three World Cup triumphs, and charismatic former heavy-weight champion Ali, widely regarded as the best boxer ever to enter the ring. — Internet

Putin eyes deeper ties with China, India

MOSCOW, 10 July—President Vladimir Putin on Monday listed China and India among his foreign policy priorities and vowed to deepen cooperation with the two emerging powers.

Addressing Russian diplomats and envoys here, Putin noted that strategic and practical interaction with China is of great importance.

"We will pay careful attention to deepening all forms of cooperation with the Chinese partners, including coordination of our actions on the international agenda," Putin said.

During his previous talks with Chinese officials, Putin said that the two emerging economies, with a strong developing momentum, are important forces in maintaining world peace.

In June, during his first foreign tours since returning to the Kremlin, Putin paid a state visit to China and talked with President Hu Jintao. There are "immense potential and broad prospects" for cooperation between the two giants, Putin told Hu. Besides China, its largest neighbor, Russia also intends to foster ties with other emerging Asian countries who are gaining political weight, "first of all our longtime partner and friend, India," Putin said.

Putin also acknowledged that Russia did not pay enough attention to Latin American and African countries in the past, and vowed to strengthen ties with those partners.—Xinhua

NAY PYI TAW, 10 July—Fourth regular session of first Amyotha Hluttaw continued for fifth day, at Amyotha Hluttaw Hall of Hluttaw Building, here, at 10 am today, attended by Deputy Speaker of Amyotha Hluttaw U Mya Nyein and 204 MPs.

At the question-and-answer session, Deputy Minister for Health Dr Win Myint replied to the questions raised by U Thet Naing Oo of Bago Region Constituency No.6 on “Ministry of Health has any plan to provide station hospitals in village-tracts with X-ray machines, X-ray rooms and generators”; by U Pe Thaung of Kachin State Constituency No.6 on “there is any plan to extend new wards in Mohnyin District Hospital (100-bed) and to fill the vacant posts of specialists and health staff there”; by U Htay Maung of Mandalay Region Constituency No.12 on “there is any plan to make necessary repair of Nyaungyan Station Hospital (16-bed) to become high-class one, to build staff quarters, to solve drinking water problem and to provide it with X-Ray room and necessary equipment”; and by U Aye of Mandalay Constituency No.7 on “there is any plan to appoint an orthopedist in NyaungU District People’s Hospital”.

Then, it needed to be presented to head of Township Health Department and countersigned by head of region/state health department. After those processes, the Ministry was scrutinizing and providing equipment to the hospitals.

District-level hospitals had been equipped with X-ray machines. For the township hospitals, hospitals that had no X-ray machines were provided with X-ray machines on a priority basis. Station hospitals were supplied based on the construction of standard X-ray room and electricity supply.

As to the second one, although head of Mohnyin District Health Department had yet to present the report asking for construction of extended patient wards in Mohnyin District Hospital (100-bed), it would be put on the priority list of 2013-2014 financial year if the head submitted engineer’s estimated
