Iran's Arak reactor looms into Israeli, Western view

The timetable for the planned start-up of the Arak heavy-water research plant is closely watched: Israeli and Western experts say any attacker would probably prefer to act before it becomes operational - to avoid generating radioactive fallout.

NEW YORK. 3 June— The number of New York parents who had their child skip at least one required vaccine due to religious reasons increased over the past decade, according to a new study. What's more, researchers found counties with high religious exemption rates also had more whooping cough cases even among children that had been fully vaccinated.

States set their own requirements on which vaccines a child must have received to enter school. All allow exemptions for medical reasons, and most, including New York, also permit parents with a religious objection to forgo vaccination. Less than half of states permit exemptions due to personal or philosophical beliefs. But those also can get counted under religious views in places with less strict exemption policies. Researchers suspect that's due to the use of a new type of pertussis vaccine - which is safer, but less effective over the long run - and to more children missing or delaying vaccination. For their study, Shaw and her colleagues tracked data from the New York State Department of Health on both religious exemptions and new whooping cough cases. Children were reported as having a religious exemption if they had been allowed to skip at least one required vaccine for nonmedical reasons.

Between 2000 and 2011, the proportion of religiously exempt kids increased from 23 in 10,000 to 45 in 10,000, the study team reported on Monday in Pediatrics. Reuters

CHICAGO, 3 June—A simple screening programme for cervical cancer using vinegar and visual exams helped reduce deaths caused by the cancer by 31 percent in a group of 150,000 poor women in India, researchers reported on Sunday. # Merck melanoma drug shrinks tumours in 38 percent of patients

CHICAGO, 3 June—A Merck & Co drug designed to unmask tumour cells and mobilize the immune system into fighting cancer helped shrink tumours in 38 percent of patients with advanced melanoma in an early-stage study, US researchers said on Sunday. Based on the findings about the drug lambrolizumab, published in the New England Journal of Medicine and presented at the American Society of Clinical Oncology meeting in Chicago, Merck says it will move directly into a late-stage clinical trial, which will start in the third quarter.

"This is a top priority at Merck," Dr Gary Gilliand, senior vice present and head of oncology at Merck Research Laboratories said in a meeting with investors. "We're going flat out to deliver benefit to patients with this novel mechanism." The moves may heap pressure on market leader Bristol-Myers Squibb, maker of Yervoy - the only approved immune system drug for the treatment of advanced melanoma, the deadliest form of skin cancer. Bristol-Myers is conducting three phase-three studies of its own drug called nivolumab in advanced melanoma, and is studying the drug's effect on a range of other cancers, including lung cancer.

Both nivolumab and lambrolizumab are part of a promising new class of drugs that disable programmed death 1 or PD-1, a protein that keeps the immune system from spotting and attacking cancer cells.

"Even though it's (lambrolizumab) the second player in the field and even though it's all early, it impressed me," said Dr Antoni Ribas of the University of California Los Angeles' Jonsson Comprehensive Cancer Centre, the lead author of the study. Last month, the US Food and Drug Administration deemed the treatment a "breakthrough therapy," a designation FDA cancer drugs chief Dr Richard Pazdur described as "knockyour-socks-off therapies."

Budding democracy's promising business

Tourism actually is a business of showing natural or man-made wonders, especially the ancient ones, or cultural ethos of a country concerned.

The world has various brands of tourism, namely, cultural, adventure, leisure, health, transit, luxury, event, bicycle, beer and wine tourism, and ecotourism and geotourism. There are even sex tourism, nightlife tourism and casino tourism in some countries.

In countries like Korea, temple stay is a popular and attractive variety of tourism in which visitors stay and dine like monks at a Buddhist monastery.

But whatever the name is, it is nothing more than a holiday business that provides the most indulgent treatment every one wishes to enjoy, with eventual motive of making handsome profits like any other business industry.

And like any other business industry, it needs sustainable development that calls for responsibility, accountability and the liability. In fact, tourism depends on culture, ancient edifices, natural and man-made heritage, natural environment which are so delicate that always needs special care and attention and preservation and restoration measures in dealing with them.

As for our country Myanmar, she has the cultural ethos, a diversity of unique people having different customs, picturesque landscapes such as Inlay Lake, ancient heritages such as Bagan and MraukU, natural wonders like Khagaborazi and Mount Victoria, and wonderful beaches, for instance, Ngapali and Ngwesaung, all with their exceptional qualities even to charm a discerning visitor.

Some of the types of tourism are not fit with our religious and cultural values. But of most of the types can be much beneficial to our country that is receiving more and more visitors year after year.

In fact, the most important thing here is that we must keep in mind the long-term interest and not just the short-term profits as this leisure industry is one of the most promising businesses of our budding democracy.

Four minutes later, the advantage was doubled via an appalling error by German keeper Marc-Andre ter Stegen, who somehow allowed a routine back pass from Benedikt Hoewedes slip off his foot into the net. Germany rebounded strongly after the half-time break, pulling one back in the 51st minute when Heiko Westermann, allowed to get free by Omar Gonzalez, powered in a header from a Max Kruse corner. NAY PYI TAW, 3 June— The upcoming 22nd World Economic Forum (WEF) on East Asia on 5-7 June is central for Myanmar as the forum would bring benefits and business opportunities to the country. Local and foreign workers have been working hard preparing for the forum at the Myanmar International Convention Centre in Nay Pyi Taw since a few days ago. Meanwhile, the government has set up sub-committees and supporting groups to hold the forum successfully.

We interviewed some of the responsible personnel of sub-committees for holding the forum.
