Vice-President Dr Sai Mauk Kham looks into education, health and development undertakings in Myitkyina

Vice-President Dr Sai Mauk Kham cordially greets internally displaced persons at Jung Mung Kong Baptist camp in Myitkyina.—MNA

NAYPYITAW, 10 Aug.— Union Peace-making Work Committee Chairman Vice-President Dr Sai Mauk Kham, together with Union Ministers Dr Mya Aye and Dr Myint Aung, the deputy ministers, Amyotha Hluttaw Representatives U Khet Htein Nan, U Sai Tin Aung and U Sai Mya Maung, the ambassadors, the diplomats from WFP, UNDP, FAO, UNICEF, UNOCHA, UNHCR, ICRC and ECHO, the resident representatives and departmental heads, arrived in Myitkyina of Kachin State by special flight of Myanma Airways this morning.

Vice-President Dr Sai Mauk Kham met the ambassadors, diplomats and resident representatives at Malikha Yeiktha and clarified matters on implementation of regional development tasks in Kachin State.

The Vice-President then paid homage to Wuntho Monastery Sayadaw Abhidaja Maha Rattha Guru Bhaddanta

Silavamsa and offered Waso robes and provisions to the Sayadaw.

Afterwards, the Vice-President attended a ceremony to provide cash and kind for internally displaced persons at the relief camp in Wuntho Monastery.

At the ceremony, Deputy Ministers Maj-Gen Maung Maung Ohn presented K 590,000, U Phone Swe packets of instant noodle, State Chief Minister U La John Ngan Hsai 50 bags of rice, Deputy Minister Dr Daw Thein Thein Htay relief supplies, Myanmar Gems Entrepreneurs Association Chairman and Htoo Foundation Patron U Teza K 1.18 million and 50 bags of rice and Union Minister Dr Mya Aye 200 dozens of exercise books for 118 victims through the officials.

"I've heard that this road is very bad. But now the road is smooth," one passenger said. After many minutes drive, we reached the top of the mountain. "It is Yinkwe mountain. Why it is named "Yinkwe mountain" is that the road is constructed by separating the heart of the mountain," Daw Nan Than Than Htwe said.

Driver U Tun Aung said, "After Yinkwe mountain, we will meet "Sand Mountain". In the rainy season, there usually

Obama pledges more oversight, transparency for secret surveillance programmes

US President Barack Obama speaks during a news conference at the White House in Washington DC on 9 Aug, 2013. Obama on Friday pledged measures to strengthen oversight and transparency of the National Security Agency (NSA)'s classified surveillance programmes following two months of controversies.

XINHUA

WASHINGTON, 10 Aug —US President Barack Obama on Friday pledged measures to strengthen oversight and transparency of the National Security Agency (NSA)'s classified surveillance programmes following two months of controversies.

"It's not enough for me as president to have confidence in these programmes. The American people need to have confidence in them as well," said Obama at a White House Press conference. He unveiled four measures as part of the efforts to stem the controversies over the surveillance programmes, which have been secretly conducted for years and revealed by former NSA contractor Edward Snowden in June.

"But given the scale of this programme, I understand the concerns of those who would worry that it could be subject to abuse," said Obama. The president said that he would work with Congress to pursue "appropriate reforms" to Section 215 of the Patriot Act, which allows the government to collect phone call records.

He will also work with the lawmakers to "improve the public's confidence in the oversight" of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court (FISC), which grants government agencies the warrants to scoop data from individuals and companies.

The president also vowed to make public more information about the surveillance programmes, and to form a high-level group of outside experts to review the "entire intelligence and communications technologies." "We can take steps to put in place greater oversight, greater transparency, and constraints on the use of this authority," he stressed.

Obama's move came ahead of his week-long vacation and after months of fierce controversies over the NSA programmes since Snowden's leak. —Xinhua

Two of Five missing in Akita torrential rain confirmed dead

AKITA, (Japan), 10 Aug—Two of five people missing in torrential rain that has hit northern Japan were on Saturday found in critical condition and later confirmed dead, local police said.

The two men — Kazuo Hagawa, 61, and Minoru Hanegawa, 58 — were in a state of cardio-respiratory arrest when they were found, according to the police. The police are searching for the other three.

The five went missing after eight houses were destroyed by a mudflow in Senboku, Akita Prefecture, which also left a 62-year-old woman in critical condition and two other women injured.

By Friday night, Senboku had seen a record 88.0 millimetres of rain per hour, with more than 270 mm of rain falling since the morning, topping the average monthly rainfall for August. In neighbouring Iwate Prefecture, a 91-year-old woman was found dead

US, Russia agree to prepare for Syria peace talks

WASHINGTON, 10 Aug —US and Russian officials agreed on Friday on the need to convene a long-delayed Syrian peace conference in Geneva as soon as possible, but they offered no concrete plan to bring the warring government and rebels to the table.

Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov told reporters after five hours of political and security meetings in Washington that officials from the two countries will meet again by the end of the month to prepare for the Syria talks.

He said much of his meeting with Secretary of State John Kerry was devoted to Syria and both men agreed they needed to convene a so-called Geneva 2 conference "as soon as possible."

Asked whether this conference would in fact ever happen, Lavrov said that Russia already had won the agreement of its ally the Syrian government to send a delegation to Geneva without any preconditions.

"John Kerry assured me that the opposition would be persuaded to come to Geneva without any preconditions on the basis of reaching agreement with the government," said Lavrov.

A US official briefing reporters after the talks, which also included Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel and his Russian counterpart Sergei Shoigu, said Washington was working closely with the Syrian opposition but the onus was on Damascus.

"The test is not whether the Syrian government will come to Geneva," the US official said. "The test is whether the Syrian government will come to Geneva prepared to negotiate the transition of full executive powers to a transitional governing body."

Moscow and Washington have been trying since May to organize an international peace conference to bring an end to the violence in Syria that has killed some 100,000 people in two years.

US to reopen 18 of 19 foreign posts closed amid security concerns

WASHINGTON, 10 Aug —Eighteen of the 19 US embassies and consulates closed this month due to worries about potential terrorist attacks will reopen on Sunday, the US State Department said on Friday.

"Our embassy in Sanaa, Yemen, will remain closed because of ongoing concerns about a threat stream indicating the potential for terrorist attacks emanating from al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula," State Department spokeswoman Jen Psaki said.

The United States will also keep its consulate in Lahore, Pakistan, shuttered, Psaki said, adding it closed on Thursday due to a "separate credible threat."

The United States shut about 20 of its embassies and consulates in the Middle East and Africa on Sunday after saying it had picked up information through surveillance and other means about unspecified terrorist threats.

US eyes resumption of Osprey transport to Okinawa next week

TOKYO, 10 Aug—The US military has informed the Japanese government of its plan to resume moving Osprey aircraft to Okinawa next week after suspending shipment due to a fatal crash of a US Air Force helicopter, a government source said on Friday.

Ten Ospreys are to be transported from Iwakuni, western Japan, to the Futenma Air Station in Okinawa, where they will join two others already shipped earlier this month.

The 12 tilt-rotor aircraft are the second batch to be deployed in Japan following the arrival of the first dozen last summer.

Transport of the planes was suspended after the crash of an HH-60 rescue helicopter on Monday at the US Marine Corps' Camp Hansen in Okinawa, southwestern Japan.

The US military wants to resume the transport as early as Monday, the source said.

But the resumption could be delayed amid stiff local opposition to the Osprey deployment because of the aircraft's mixed safety record overseas.

“Proto-mammal” fossil sheds light on early mammal evolution

The newly discovered fossil of a “proto-mammal” unearthed in north China.—REUTERS

SHENYANG, 10 Aug — The newly discovered fossil of a “proto-mammal” unearthed in north China’s Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region has shed light on the evolution of the world’s earliest mammals.

Scientists believe that the well-preserved fossil of the Megaconus mammaliaformis, an herbivore with hair and fur that lived during the Jurassic era about 165 million years ago, was about 30 cm long and weighed an estimated 250 grams.

Zhou Changfu, a scientist with the Paleontology Museum of Liaoning and Shenyang Normal University, led the research program with scientists from the University of Bonn and the University of Chicago.

Zhou said in an interview with Xinhua on Thursday that the rare evidence of the animal’s fur proves that it had the skin texture of a mammal, but it is still unknown whether it had a bare midriff that enabled it feed a newborn cub or if had a brood pouch.

The earliest mammaliaform groups are long-extinct relatives of modern mammals that co-existed with feathered dinosaurs in the Jurassic era. Prior to the discovery of the fossil, no complete fossils of the earliest mammals had ever been discovered, he said.

He said the animal’s lower jaw, thoracic vertebra, lumbar vertebra and ankle joint all suggest that it had evolved from reptile to proto-mammal, Zhou said.

The fossil was unearthed from the Daohu Groove in Ningchen County, north China’s Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region, where scientists have also unearthed other fossils of early mammals such as the Jurassic beaver, which, however, appeared after the Megaconus mammaliaformis. An article on the discovery was published in the 8 August issue of Nature.

iPhone device detects heart problems, helps prevent strokes

SYDNEY, 10 Aug — A special iPhone device can be used to quickly detect heart rhythm problems and help prevent stroke, according to University of Sydney research revealed on Friday at the Australia and New Zealand Cardiac Society conference on the Gold Coast of Queensland. The research found the cheap device, known as the AliveCor Heart Monitor for iPhone (iECG), was highly-effective and accurate in screening patients with undiagnosed atrial fibrillation (AF).

The device was invented by an Australian scientist and a US cardiologist. University of Sydney Professor Ben Freedman and his colleagues tested the device on randomly selected people aged 65 or older at 10 Sydney pharmacies. He said the device was an exciting breakthrough and can be operated without special skills. “Atrial Fibrillation is the most common heart rhythm problem and is responsible for almost one third of all strokes,” he said.

“AF increases with age, affecting more than 15 percent of people aged 85 years and over.” According to Freedman, people with atrial fibrillation face up to a five-fold increased risk of stroke, and tend to have more severe and life-threatening strokes. Freedman said the research shows around 50,000 Australians aged over 65 have AF, but do not know it.

“There are currently a large number of people with unknown AF who are at high risk of stroke, but who are not on any medication,” he said. “The iECG allows us to screen patients for atrial fibrillation in minutes, and treat people early.” The university researchers are currently trialling iECG screening in doctors’ surgeries in Sydney.—Xinhua

Switching tactics in ambitious new move

BEIJING, 10 Aug — Chinese telecoms giant Huawei Technologies Co Ltd showed its ambition to become a leader, rather than a follower, in the network business field for corporate clients it recently entered by introducing a new line of switches on Thursday.

The Shenzhen-based company unveiled the Huawei S12700 series of switch products that introduce software-defined network architecture into campus networks for the first time in the industry.

At a Beijing news briefing, Huawei said the S12700 switch will hit the market in September and start large-scale commercial use in November. William Xu, chief executive officer of Huawei’s Enterprise Business Group, said the new product holds technological advantages over rivals and will add momentum to sales of Huawei’s enterprise network products for years to come. “The S12700 switch shows the industry direction in building campus networks,” Xu said.

The technology it contains supports diversified trends in business environments, including cloud computing, ‘bring your own device’ and big data-related analytics, he added. Huawei’s move directly challenges dominant members of the sector, such as US-based Cisco Systems Inc, in the enterprise network equipment business. “Cisco undoubtedly takes the lion’s share in the global switch market but Huawei is quite aggressive and is aiming high to become a leader in future,” said Zhao Hailin, an analyst with research firm IHS iSuppli

Huawei Technologies Co Ltd unveiled on Thursday a series of switch products, which the company hopes will add sales momentum to its enterprise network products.—XINHUA

Unlike Huawei’s traditional business with telecom carriers, where industry standards are set by certain global organizations, the industry standards in the enterprise network gear market are established by those who develop the most advanced products, Zhao added.”

In the past, Huawei acted like a follower because it was a newcomer in the enterprise business. Now, the company has sent a signal that it wants to lead the industry,” Zhao said.

Cisco had a 58.8 percent share of the market for switches, which connect computer networks, in the first quarter compared with Huawei’s 2 percent, according to data from IDC and Bloomberg.

Huawei officially expanded into the enterprise business and consumer-related smartphone manufacturing in 2011, after the traditional telecom gear market got relatively saturated.—Xinhua

Thanakha

An importance daily task for a Myanmar woman involves the fragrant bark of thanakha tree (Murraya paniculata). A circular stone mortar is used to grind the bark into the powder to which a little water is added to make a cream coloured paste that is applied thinly or thickly, according to preference, to the face or limbs, where it serves as both makeup and a cooling sunscreen.

The role of women

For centuries Myanmar women have enjoyed equality in education and business. They earn the same pay as men of equivalent professional rank, although mostly only unmarried women do not want to stay late in the office. Housewives often work part-time as private gem or real estate dealers. Education for women has been supported since the time of royalty when even handmaidens who wrote poetry earned much respect. Since the 1960s women have outnumbered men on the academic staff of universities and are also well represented in the medical profession.

Courtship and marriage

Young people date only when they are serious so to socialise they go out in groups. Myanmar society is conservative and a woman will harm her reputation if she goes out in the evening with a man who is not her husband or fiancé, especially if he is a foreigner. Young people are not forced to marry a partner chosen by their parents but usually marry someone acceptable to their extended family. A Myanmar woman is not subservient to her mother-in-law and she usually controls the family finances. Although she respects her husband, no family or business decisions are made without her knowledge. For a Myanmar Buddhist couple, the union is legal and binding if they live together and their relationship is recognised by their neighbours and society. Usually, the modern practice is for the pair to sign a marriage deed in the presence of a judge. Myanmar brides do not pay a dowry.

In the old days it was the men who had to offer suitable gifts of diamonds and gold for the hand of their betrothed. Wedding expenses are usually split between the two families or if one side takes care of it, the other will buy new furniture for the couple. Weddings for Myanmar Buddhists are not religious ceremonies and monks play no part in them. A traditional wedding is an elegant, formal event with soft music, rituals overseen by a Brahmin astrologer and the presence of hundred of guests.

Divorce can be initiated by either partner and property brought into the marriage by each side is taken back and property acquired during the marriage is divided. Custody of the children is usually given to the mother.

Under customary law, a Myanmar Buddhist man can marry more than once without divorcing his first wife but this is not considered socially acceptable and is rare.

Sources say BlackBerry open to going private

A view shows a cracked cookie with a BlackBerry logo at the BlackBerry Z10 launch at a Rogers store in Toronto on 5 Feb, 2013. — REUTERS

NEW YORK, 10 Aug — BlackBerry Ltd is warming up to the possibility of going private, as the smartphone maker battles to revive its fortunes, several sources familiar with the situation said. Chief Executive Thorsten Heins and the company's board is increasingly coming around to the idea that taking BlackBerry private would give them breathing room to fix its problems out of the public eye, the sources said. "There is a change of tone on the board," one of the sources said on Thursday.

No deal is imminent, however, and BlackBerry has not launched any kind of a sale process, the sources said. Even if it tried, BlackBerry could find it hard to come up with a buyer and the funding to go private. With the company still posting losses and bleeding subscribers, private equity firms and other buyers may not want to step up. The company's shares have fallen more than 19 percent this year. Its market value has fallen to $4.8 billion, from $84 billion at its peak in 2008. BlackBerry, which had been pinning its hopes for a turnaround on its new line of BlackBerry 10 devices, declined to comment. The sources declined to be named because these discussions are private. BlackBerry's openness to consider a deal marks a radical shift in thinking at the once high-flying smartphone maker.

Until recently, BlackBerry, formerly known as Research in Motion and a pioneer in providing secured emails on handheld devices, had been bent on staying independent, betting its turnaround on its latest smartphones.—Reuters

School children consumed recalled Fonterra dairy protein

AUCKLAND, 10 Aug — Students at a high school in New Zealand consumed protein drinks containing whey concentrate which had been recalled by dairy giant Fonterra, putting them at risk of botulism. But Fonterra, which has come under fire amid a widespread contamination scare, said no illnesses had been reported and there was no health risk to the students at Palmerston North Girls' High School. The company, which had provided the whey protein to the school from its product development center, had previously assured consumers that all products containing the tainted ingredient had been withdrawn from markets.

The school had asked for the product from Fonterra for a science project to make "smoothie" fruit drinks and it had been supplied in February. "I am disappointed and concerned to learn of this incident," said Fonterra Chief Executive Theo Spierings. "While I realize that agreeing to provide the whey protein concentrate to the school for their project was well-intentioned, providing product from the Innovation Centre in this way should never have happened." "I can fully understand this may cause some anxiety in the school community and on behalf of everyone at Fonterra, I want to say how sorry we are that this has happened."

The world's largest dairy exporter has been in damage control mode since revealing at the weekend the contamination that led to product recalls in China, New Zealand, Australia and elsewhere in Asia.

Mailings may up colon cancer screening rates in underserved

SAN DIEGO, 10 Aug — Reminding uninsured people to get screened for colon cancer by sending them letters and calling them at home increases testing rates compared to asking them at doctors' offices, says a new study.

Researchers found uninsured people in one Texas community were twice as likely to be screened if they were offered a colonoscopy free of charge by mail and over the phone. The same people were three times more likely to opt for screening when they were offered a stool test that needs no preparation and can be done at home, compared to those who received standard treatment.

"Clearly the outreach worked and it was a lot better than usual care, but we did see a significant difference in whether we offered colonoscopy or the (fecal immunochemical test)," said Dr Samir Gupta, the study's lead author from the University of California, San Diego.

Colon and rectal cancers are the second leading cause of cancer-related deaths in the US, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). Approximately 52,000 people died from the cancers in 2009. Screening rates for colon cancer have increased over the past few years, but the CDC says about 22 million people aren't up-to-date with the tests. That's especially true for minorities and the uninsured, write the authors in JAMA Internal Medicine. The government-backed US Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) recommends that people between ages 50 and 75 get screened by colonoscopy every 10 years.

During a colonoscopy, a doctor uses a long flexible tube equipped with a tiny video camera to see the interior of the colon.

Alternatively, the USPSTF says people in that age group can have a high-sensitivity fecal occult blood test every year, or a sigmoidoscopy — which is similar to a colonoscopy — every five years in addition to fecal occult blood testing every three years.

For the new study, Gupta and his colleagues randomly assigned 5,970 uninsured patients in the John Peter Smith Health Network in Fort Worth and Tarrant County, Texas, to one of three groups in January 2011. One group of 3,898 people received usual care, which consisted of doctors asking patients while they were at the clinic for an appointment if they'd like to be screened for colon cancer. People in the other two groups received letters in English and Spanish with information on colon and rectal cancer and an invitation to get a free screening.

The participants in the outreach groups also received two automated phone messages, two phone calls from real people and help setting up appointments for screening. Within the outreach group, 479 people were offered colonoscopies and 1,593 people were offered a fecal occult blood test known as a fecal immunochemical test (FIT) that they could complete at home.

By February 2012, 12 percent of the usual care group had been screened for colon cancer. That compared to 25 percent in the colonoscopy outreach group and 41 percent in the stool test group. Colonoscopies are usually seen as the most thorough colon cancer screening, but Gupta said the better response in the stool test group may make up for its inferiority.—Reuters

More Chinese pharmacies stop selling bear bile

CHENGDU, 10 Aug — Eight Chinese pharmacy chains announced on Thursday that they have stopped selling bear bile products, as they joined a campaign launched by an animal charity to end controversial bear farming.

The eight chains, with 151 drugstores in Chengdu, capital of southwest Sichuan Province, issued the statement at an activity held by the Animals Asia Foundation (AAF). Overall, 260 drugstores of 11 chains in China have joined the AAF campaign to stop such sales.

The eight local chains included Chengdu Dahua Pharmacy, Furong Grand Pharmacy and Chengdu Grand Pharmacy. Bear bile is held in traditional Chinese medicine (TCM) theory as a cure for ailments such as eye and liver problems, but the brutal practice of tapping bile from live bears has drawn much criticism in recent years from animal rights activists and the public.

Zhong Yuanwei, vice general manager of Chengdu Dahua, said the business endorsed the AAF campaign to shoulder its social and environmental responsibilities as well as to ensure the health of customers.

Medical practitioners, including many TCM doctors, have expressed doubt about the safety of bear bile, whose extraction process inflicts so much pain and damage to bears' health that they are often left fatally ill.—Xinhua

S Korean fighter jets make nonstop flight to Alaska for drills

SEOUL, 10 Aug — South Korean F-15K combat jets have flown nonstop to Alaska, using in-flight refueling to take part in an upcoming US-led multinational exercise known as “Red Flag,” South Korea’s Defence Ministry said on Friday. The flight to Alaska “has become the first time for our fighter aircraft to fly non-stop by aerial refueling to participate in a joint drill overseas,” spokesman Wi Yong Seop told a news briefing.

Wi added that South Korean pilots are expected to further improve their skills by joining the multinational drills, hosted by the US Pacific Air Forces from 12-23 August in Alaska.

Red Flag aims at training pilots from the United States and other allied countries. South Korea’s six F-15K jets departed from an airbase in the southern city of Daegu on 2 August, flying over 7,000 kilometres to the Eielson Air Force Base, refueling several times.

In-flight refueling or aerial refueling refers to the process of transferring fuel from one aircraft to another during flight. South Korea has purchased 60 of Boeing’s F-15 fighter jets since 2002 in the first two stages of its fighter modernization programme. Gunmen abduct two Turkish Airlines staff in Beirut

BEIRUT, 10 Aug — Gunmen abducted two Turkish Airlines pilots in Beirut on Friday, forcing them from an airport bus in the early hours of the morning and prompting Turkey to urge its citizens to leave Lebanon.

Lebanese media said that a group claimed responsibility for the abduction in the name of nine Lebanese Shi’ite Muslims kidnapped near the Turkish-Syrian border last year, saying the two Turks would be freed if the Lebanese captives were released. It was not immediately possible to verify the reported claim. Turkey’s foreign ministry and the airline said they were in close contact with Lebanese authorities but had no immediate information on the condition of the two airline staff.

UN chief urges leaders of all Egyptian parties to avoid violence

UNITED NATIONS, 10 Aug — UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon on Friday called upon the leaders of all Egyptian parties to “avoid the path of violence” in order to “prevent further loss of life among the Egyptian people.”

“The secretary-general’s immediate concern is for the leaders of Egypt, on all sides, to exercise their leadership and their responsibility to do whatever can be done to prevent further loss of life among the Egyptian people,” said a statement issued here late Friday by Ban’s spokesman. “As long as they avoid the path of violence, the secretary-general is confident that the Egyptian people, representing one of the world’s great and historic civilizations, will successfully find a way forward,” the statement said. “The United Nations remains fully engaged in supporting Egypt.”

The political stalemate is under way with the ongoing standoff between the sit-in supporters of ousted President Mohamed Morsi and the military-backed interim government. Nearly 300 people have been killed in violence since Morsi’s removal.

“As the Eid al-Fitr Muslim holiday comes to a close, the secretary-general is deeply concerned by the continuing political stalemate in Egypt,” the statement said.

“The secretary-general repeats his commitment to support non-violent Egyptian-led approaches to meeting the aspirations of the Egyptian people.”

Russia allows Snowden to work, travel through the country

MOSCOW, 10 Aug — Former US National Security Agency worker Edward Snowden is free to travel within the Russian territory wherever he wants to, Russian Federal Migration Service (FMS) said on Friday.

“In line with the law, he has a right to travel within territory of the Russian Federation and a right to work with the exception of the government services,” head of the Moscow regional FMS division Oleg Molodiyevsky told reporters. Earlier this week, Ruslan Gattarov, a member of the Federation Council, upper house of the parliament, has said he would offer Snowden a consultant’s job in the Council.

The FMS’s Moscow branch would issue a permission allowing Snowden to move to another region if he applied one, said Molodiyevsky. Snowden was stranded at Moscow’s Sheremetyevo Airport for six weeks after Washington revoked his passport. He faces espionage charges in the United States after disclosing a classified intelligence surveillance project code-named PRISM.

On 1 August, Russia granted him a year-long asylum, allowing him to quietly slip out of the airport.

Under the Russian law, all foreigners must register with the FMS’s territorial branch upon taking up residence. The United States on Wednesday announced the cancellation of a one-on-one summit originally scheduled early next month in Moscow, citing the Snowden case as a lack of progress in bilateral relations.—Xinhua

Spain reviews train safety after fatal crash

A fireman carries a wounded victim from the wreckage of a train crash near Santiago de Compostela, northwestern Spain, on 24 July, 2013.

REUTERS

MADRID, 10 Aug — Spain is reviewing the safety of its rail system after a train crash in northwestern Galicia last month killed 79 people, Public Works Minister Ana Pastor said on Friday.

Excessive speed and human error have been blamed for the train’s derailment at a curve on the outskirts of the northwestern town of Santiago de Compostela.

But the accident has also raised questions over the high-speed train network’s signaling and security systems.

Speaking before a parliamentary committee, Pastor said she had hired auditors to review the maximum speed limit across every stretch of Spain’s rail network to prevent such a tragedy from happening again.

“We will review all of the protocols and systems, the table of speed limits, everything,” Pastor said.

Spain’s railway network combines lines that are exclusively high-speed with sophisticated safety mechanisms and conventional lines, such as at the site of the Santiago crash, with less rigorous automatic braking signals.

Some high-speed trains use both types of rails, and drivers must switch back and forth between the two systems.

Spain has invested 45 billion euros over more than 20 years in building the world’s second biggest network of high-speed rail, which it has continued to expand despite economic stagnation and a wide budget gap.

Francisco Garzon, 52, who was driving the train that crashed on 24 July, has been charged with negligent homicide and released without bail pending trial.

Minister Ahmet Davutoglu said he had spoken with the Lebanese prime minister about the abductions. “As in previous such cases we are making every effort to reunite the pilots with their families safely,” Davutoglu said on his Twitter account.

Friday’s incident came days after a senior Lebanese political source said that authorities had information suggesting that families of the Lebanese detainees, or their supporters, were planning to take Turkish hostages. Lebanese media quoted a spokesman for the families as saying they had no link to the Beirut abductions. But shortly after the claim of responsibility was issued, celebratory fireworks were set off in the Bir al-Abed district of southern Beirut where some of the relatives live.

500 houses affected by erosion in Ngazun Tsp

MANDALAY, 10 Aug—A total of 1000 acres of farmlands were eroded by the change of river water course and affected more than 500 houses in Yeileithaung village-tract in Rakhadipa village in Ngazun Township.

Of them, 115 houses are built on the alluvial land. A total of 30 houses were relocated in the previous year.

The farmlands were destroyed by the erosion of Ayeyawady River and the villagers are hoping for reclaiming farmlands.

Water courses conservation engineers and Myanmar river engineers are trying to change the course of river by building gravel retaining wall in Rakhadipa village.

Mandalay Region Road Transport Minister U Kyaw Hsan visited the site of erosion on 6 August and inspected the erosion prevention measures.

He was conducted round the site by Water Resources and Improvement of River Systems Department's Mandalay Region Head U Win Hlaing and officials.

The minister asked the engineers to try to develop alluvial lands and employ appropriate techniques to prevent further erosions.

He also attended to the needs for relocation of the villages.

Future challenge for Yangon

The commercial hub of Myanmar is speeding up its development with the high aim of translating the city of high population density into a clean and green one. First of all, downtown area and business districts have seen influx of vehicles following the scheme of replacing the overage vehicles with imported autos on the streets. Statistics shows that the number of registered cars on our road had risen dramatically and reached more than 400,000 in Yangon while there are over three million vehicles nationally.

Because of the lack of monitoring devices in Yangon, no data is immediately available about the air pollution caused by vehicular emission which is the main source of the hazard. But the plan to monitor the air quality standard of the commercial heart of the country is on the way. We all recognize that quality of air is not only good for the environment but also can contribute to better health for residents. Air pollution triggered by high volume of traffic shortens life expectancy, causing from minor respiratory problems such as sinusitis, dry throat and irritated eyes to asthma among children and chronic bronchitis and heart diseases among adults in their sixties. It is a major issue for public health in urban areas.

A retired official of occupational health department expressed his view to relieve our growing concerns over harmful emission from traffic that a layer of smog over the city has not reached its danger level as newly-imported vehicles of latest models only produce a small amount of exhaust fumes. If the level of particulate matter exceeds the WHO's guideline level of 50 micrograms averaged over a 24-hour period, it will result in adverse health consequences. WHO's studies revealed that worldwide deaths of about 3.2 million people in 2010 were due to air pollution.

Although air pollution does not cause serious disease straight away as it requires prolonged exposure, health risks are real and chronic exposure to air pollution is not only bad for environmental health but also can increase the risk of developing heart and respiratory diseases. Nonetheless, more attentions are needed to monitor air pollution in downtown and industrial areas and heighten public awareness about environmental impact, the dangers of air pollution and how it is caused.

Flood and drought are the two natural disasters which every country in the world encounters, depending upon the climatic conditions. Water is the elixir of life and the source of water is rain. Though too much water is not needed and not wanted, no rain causes the death of life. So, since ancient times men have used traditional means of stopping unwanted rain or calling much wanted rain and these means were all religious-appealing for favour to natural phenomena which were believed to be the abodes of super natural powers.

Myanmar, though a tropical country with hardly any trace of a desert in the true sense of the term, does experience both flood and drought when climate turns abnormal. In May of this year, the entire country was threatened by the impending cyclone "Mahasen". People were preparing to encounter it as best they could. It was reported that at some places, people held Shin Upagupta puja rite to ward off the cyclone. Mahasen did come but it bypassed Myanmar causing no damage to us. Inspired by that happy tidings the writer wrote the article "He wards off natural disaster" in 2 June 2013 Sunday issue of English Daily The New Light of Myanmar.

These days, there are floods, heavy showers and damages in coastal and lower Myanmar, as well as drought and water shortages in rain shadowed areas in central dry zones. People are holding Myanmar traditional rites such as tug of war sport. Therefore the writer wishes to present to the public all Myanmar traditions of rain calling in this article.

One of the 550 Jatakas or Buddha's birth stories tells the story of a fish king [Nga Yant Min or Snake-headed fish]. This fish king was the Buddha-to-be in previous existence. He and his relations and fish populace lived in a natural pond near the town of Sawutthi in Kosala kingdom in ancient India. Due to scarcity of rain, water in the pond diminished and all watery creatures took refuge in the mud, crows and eagles easily picked up and swallowed the creatures from the mud. Seeing these miseries and sufferings, the fish king appealed to the Rain God to send down showers to rescue all beings from drought. The Rain God responded to his appeal with heavy downpours. This Fish King's invocation of and appeal to the Rain God became Nga Yant Min Paritta. A paritta is a sutta to ward off evil or harm, which is recited or chanted to call rain, while cool, and scented water is poured on the image of the Fish King Nga Yant Min. There is a pleasant wooded hill named Yan Kin Taung to the due east of Mandalay. Among many Buddhist edifices set up on it, the oldest and most sacred is a natural grotto, right on its summit. It was formed due to the split into two of the high rocky peak. Down deep in that grotto is a natural spring oozing out cool fresh water, forming a little pond in which these statues of Nga Yant Min are placed for veneration. Two were sculpted out of Sagyin marble stones, and the third was moulded of iron. These fish figures represent another fish king of Jataka story. This Fish King lived in the Ayeyapatta [Ayeyawady] river, which was guarded by a serpent Naga King Named Ayeyapatta. When the serpent Naga chased the Fish King to eat it, the latter escaped and took refuge in the above-mentioned pond and was safe from all dangers. Since then the hill came to be known as Yan Kin hill [Danger free hill]. Whenever there is drought in upper Myanmar, people in Mandalay and around perform rain calling rite by putting one statue of Nga Yant Min in the pond on a decorated palanquin and carrying it in a ceremonial procession, pouring cool scented water on the statue while chanting the Nga Yant Min paritta, invoking and inviting rain. Coincidentally or miraculously, showers do come down, sometimes slowly or sometime heavily. The writer, being a Mandalayan, had personal experience of this rite. People do believe that this rain calling rite works.

Yan Kin Taung hill and statues of Fish King in the pond in the grotto have historic association. Prince Min Shin Saw, the elder son of King Alaung Sithu [1112-1167 A.D.] of Bagan dynasty, during his exile in Mandalay District, built a town named Bo Tet Myo and carried many development works such as digging irrigations, reservoirs like Aung Pin Lei Lake and Mya Nanda Lake, reclaiming agricultural lands. The entire district prospered. But there were three successive years of drought reducing the terrain into a parched land, causing many damages and sufferings. At the advice of the learned Sayadaw monks, a grand puja [worshipping] was held for Nga Yant Min Fish King statue which was ceremonially showered with cool scented fresh water and Nga Yant Min paritta was chanted. Down came rain torrentially, flooding everywhere turning the parched land into marshy swamps breeding insects and mosquitoes, causing malaria to the people. Learned Sayadaw monks advised the Prince to move the stone statue of Nga Yant Min Fish King to the pond in the grotto of Yan Kin Hill and to perform water pouring rite only when there was drought. Since then, Yan Kin hill, Nga Yant Min statue in the grotto, and Nga Yant Min paritta for rain calling are associated and well-known in Mandalay Region till today.

Another rain calling rite is the tug-of-war (ငွေ့ဆွဲပွဲ) which in Myanmar is not only a mere traditional sport but also a rain calling rite. Legend has it that in the reign of King Narathu [1167-1170 A.D.] there was a hermit named Shin Mahtee who was an alchemist, experimenting his formula to make a philosopher's stone – a ball of mercury compound which could give the possessor supernatural powers—longevity of life, immunity from all dangers, panacea to cure all kinds of diseases and turning all base metals into gold by touching with it.

King Narathu and

wealthy man Kyaw Swa and his wife Thawdar supplied the hermit with all metals including gold. For a long time the hermit Shin Mahtee could not succeed in his experiment, though he had used a great amount of mercury and gold. Royal treasury became exhausted and wealthy couple Kyaw Swa and Thawdar were impoverished. King Narathu suspected the hermit was a swindler and so ordered his men to pull out the hermit's two eyes. Disappointed and deeply sad and desperate blind hermit told his assistant to throw into the pit of latrine his experimented mercury compound ball. On doing so, the assistant at once witnessed the strange phenomenon of the mercury compound ball flying out of the pit emitting colourful radiances. Catching hold of it, the assistant ran to the hermit and explained all what had happened. The hermit ordered the assistant to go to the wet market and get two eyes from slaughtered animal. The assistant brought one eye of goat and one eye of a bull. The hermit put these two eyes into his eye sockets and touched them with his mercury compound ball. Immediately the hermit regained his eyesight. The hermit Shin Mahtee acquired a new name "Shin Iza-gona" meaning the hermit with the eyes of goat and bull.

With his mercury compound ball [philosopher's stone] the hermit touched all base metals Bagan people collected and brought to him. These metals turned into gold. Bagan people became rich. They built temples, pagodas, monasteries, and did many social welfare works. Impoverished Kyaw Swa, Thawdar and family had left Bagan. They were at large. So they missed the hermit who now disappeared into the forest for solitary hermit life.

Hearing all these news, King Narathu sent out his men to bring the hermit to him. But the hermit could not be found. Then he sent soldiers to capture Kyaw Swa, Thawdar and the family. They were caught some distance away from Bagan.

Myanmar Tradition of Rain Calling

The King tortured them to tell whereabouts of the hermit. In fact they did not know what had happened to the hermit and his experiment of the philosopher's stone. So they could not tell where the hermit was. Thawdar escaped and was rescued by the hermit. Kyawswa died during the torture. He became nat spirit due to violent death. He lived on Mount Popa. By way of vengeance upon King Narathu, Kyaw Swa the nat spirit drove away all rain bearing clouds from Bagan sky, causing drought.

Upon consultation with the 37 nat spirits of Pantheon, King Narathu was told that it was Kyaw Swa the nat spirit who was withholding rain. The king invoked Kyaw Saw the nat spirit who explained everything and asked the king to perform the rite of holding a tug-of-war contest to please him and he would then release rain upon Bagan. The king did accordingly and the public participated in the contest, playing music, singing, dancing, beating drums, offering coconut, fruits, bananas, cakes and flowers to Kyaw Swa the nat spirit, appealing him to bring down rain. Kyaw Swa the nat spirit appeared at the centre of the tug-of-war contest. Dancing merrily and releasing rain. Down came heavy showers with lightings and roaring thunders, flooding the parched land.

Kyaw Swa the nat spirit sang gleefully,

"Yee, farmers and peasants, cheer up, keep going your agricultural activities."

"I'll bring down showers, dig up canals, tanks and reservoirs to store rain water."

"Grow paddy, grow all crops, grow all vegetables."

"Donate your yields to Three Gems [the Buddha, the Dhamma and the Sangha]. Donate to the poor, the needful. I shall always help you."

Before that rite was performed Kyaw Swa the nat spirit was known as Moe Kaung Kyaw Swa meaning Kyaw Swa the rain withholder. After that rite was performed he became Moe Kaung Kyaw Swa meaning Kyaw Swa the rain giver. In upper Myanmar, whenever there is scarcity of rain or drought, it is customary to hold a tug-of-war contest to invoke Moe Kaung Kyaw Swa spirit, appease him and beg him to release rain. They believe and experience rain does come after the rite or sometimes even during the performance.

Cambodia says probe into bomb blast, rocket grenade shell discovery still underway

PHNOM PENH, 10 Aug — Cambodian Deputy Prime Minister and Interior Minister Sar Kheng said on Friday that he had ordered an investigation into a bomb blast early Wednesday and a rocket grenade shell discovery early Thursday in the capital.

“I have ordered a thorough investigation into the two cases. I think that there may be a third party created these issues in order to cause social unrest,” he told reporters, adding that the identity of the perpetrators remained unknown.

“The doers have bad deeds, aiming to cause social unrest and instability,” he said.

At 01:05 am on Wednesday morning, an improvised bomb, planted by unidentified men near a trash bin outside the fence of the Phnom Penh Municipal Court, went off, but caused no injury. On the following morning, two M381 rocket grenade shells were dumped on the windowsill of a house in the capital.

These incidents happened just 10 days after the general election, in which the ruling Cambodian People's Party (CPP) of Prime Minister Hun Sen won the victory, but the opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP) rejected the results, claiming serious irregularities during the poll.

The initial unofficial results showed that the CPP won 68 of the 123 parliamentary seats, with the CNRP taking the remaining 55 seats.

Sar Kheng confirmed Friday that soldiers and armored vehicles had been deployed on the outskirts of Phnom Penh in order to ensure security and stability as CNRP leader Sam Rainsy has repeatedly warned to lead mass protests against the election results.

Father, son back to communal life after 40 years living in jungle

HANOI, 10 Aug — An 82-year-old man and his 41-year-old son were brought back to communal life last Wednesday after 39 years of living in the jungle in Vietnam's central Quang Ngai Province, about 730 km south of Hanoi, reports said.

Ho Van Thanh, the father, and his son, Ho Van Lang, were found to live deep in the forest in Tra Phong commune, Tay Tra District of Quang Ngai Province. “The old man was severely exhausted, with one leg paralyzed, while his son who was sitting nearby spoke nothing and was confused,” local Tien Phong (Vanguard) newspaper reported Friday, quoting Ho Minh Lam, Thanh's nephew, who brought back the father and son to the village. “When we arrived, my uncle was very weak, with one leg paralyzed. He told me, in a faint voice, that he had been sick for about six months. My cousin showed fear upon seeing us,” Lam was quoted by the newspaper as saying.

Lam said that a few days ago, he had a dream about his uncle and cousin returning to the village and both appeared to be healthy. “According to our customs, it is a bad sign that something wrong would happen soon. So I decided to tell all of my relatives and the village's leaders about my uncle and cousin living in the forest, and ask them for help. The local police joined me in rescuing them,” Lam said.

Truong Ngoc Dong, chairman of Tra Phong commune people's committee, was quoted as saying that back to 1959, Ho Van Thanh and his wife, Ho Thi Phuong, and their two children came to settle in Tra Khe commune in Tay Tra district.

army of the Military Zone 5. One day in 1972, he came home for a family visit when a bomb fell on a shelter near his house, killing 26 people inside, including his mother and his two sons. After the accident, Thanh and his wife moved to live in the nearby Tra Xinh commune, where they had another two sons.

Too shocked by the death of his mother and sons, Thanh went mad and in 1974, he brought his two-year-old son, Ho Van Lanh, to hide in the jungle leaving behind his wife and the other six-month-old son, Ho Van Tri.—Xinhua

Vietnamese legislative chief pledges to facilitate cooperation with Thai friendship legislators

HANOI, 10 Aug — Chairman of Vietnam's National Assembly Nguyen Sinh Hung has pledged that Vietnam will facilitate the Vietnamese and Thai friendship legislators to continue their close cooperation.

Hung made the statement at a meeting with Pajjit Srenwarakan, chairman of the Thailand-Vietnam Parliamentary Friendship Group in Vietnam's capital Hanoi on Friday, the state-run news agency VNA reported. During the meeting, Hung expressed his pleasure with the outcomes of the working of Parliamentary Friendship Groups of Thailand and Vietnam, hailing their specific cooperation activities as practical to the ties between the two lawmaking bodies.

Hung also expressed his delight at the two countries' establishment of strategic partnership, describing it as an important step forward in deepening the two countries' ties in a practical manner in the interests of both countries and for peace, stability and development in the region.

Hung proposed the Thai National Assembly to support Vietnam within both bilateral and multilateral cooperation frameworks, facilitate Vietnamese business operations, and create favorable conditions for Vietnamese nationals in Thailand.—Xinhua

Kansai Electric loses over 1,000 business clients after rate hike

OSAKA, 10 Aug — Kansai Electric Power Co has lost over 1,000 large-lot users, such as companies and local governments, since April when it raised the electricity rate for business-

The number of clients who canceled their contracts minus those who renewed the contracts came to 1,050 between 1 April and 1 July, a sharp increase from 195 for fiscal 2011 and 61 for fiscal 2012.

The clients' departure so far is not expected to significantly affect the company's earnings as they comprise about 1 percent of some 117,000 business customers. If more clients leave, it could start having an im-act on earnings. Those who left Kansai Electric appear to have switched to other power suppliers such as the Tokyo-based Enet Corp. funded by Tokyo Gas Co and Osaka Gas Co among others.—Kyodo News

Vacation exodus peaks in Japan, roads, trains congested

TOKYO, 10 Aug — The annual rush of travellers during the Japanese “Bon” summer holidays peaked on Saturday, with roads and railway stations crammed with people heading for their hometowns and other destinations. Almost all reserved seats on shinkansen bullet trains from Tokyo were booked for the morning on the Tohoku, Yamagata, Joutetsu, Nagano and Tokaido lines.

Expressways were also congested, with vehicles backed up for 43 kilometres on a section of the Tomei Expressway in Kanagawa Prefecture and for 33 km on the Chuo Expressway in Yamagata Prefecture, according to the Japan Road Traffic Information Centre.

Domestic flights departing from Tokyo's Haneda Airport to regional areas were booked close to capacity, with the reservation rate at 93 percent for Japan Airlines Co and 92 percent for All Nippon Airways Co, according to the airlines.

Transnational highway to boost China-Vietnam tourism

NANNING, 9 Aug —A transnational highway linking a city in south China and a Vietnamese tourist destination is expected to enhance the tourist industry in the two countries.

The 400-km-long highway, which opened earlier this week, connects Chongzuo City in Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region and the Vietnamese city of Ha Long, shortening bus travel time between the two locations to 7.5 hours.

Chongzuo attracts a great number of tourists with its beautiful transnational waterfalls and charming ethnic culture, while Ha Long is adjacent to Ha Long Bay, a famous tourist destination in Vietnam.

Lu Quan, deputy manager of the Business Management Department of the Guangxi Yunde Group, the operator of the highway, said it was the first transnational highway to link the two cities, and that it will facilitate transportation for visitors from both countries.—Xinhua

Jennifer Aniston in no rush to get married

LOS ANGELES, 10 Aug—Jennifer Aniston is tired of addressing rumours that she and fiancé Justin Theroux have called of their wedding.

Aniston, 44, and Theroux, 41, got engaged in August last year and the absence of a wedding almost a year after the engagement has led to many tabloid stories, reported E!News. But Aniston, who plays the role of a stripper in upcoming comedy We're The Millers, is irritated to be at the centre of such stories.

“Well, there was no wedding planned! Let me just say this about that. Do you realize that the majority of all of those tag rags are loaded with absolute false information?,” Aniston said.

“They like to create the stories, because it’s not interesting, the story of we’re really happy and in love and feel like we’re married and eventually we’re going to get married when we find the time,” she said. “I don’t think there’s a rush.”

Aniston says her personal life is not so entertaining unless it is coloured by a scandal. “It’s a drag that they sort of have to paint this horrible negative picture and it’s just to sell magazines. And it’s a bummer because it’s not true. I was supposed to have it (the wedding) in March I think. I’d like to be a part of this plan!,” Aniston said.

Miley Cyrus names her new album Bangerz

The singer announced the album title on Twitter

LONDON, 10 Aug— Singer-actress Miley Cyrus’ new album will be called ‘Bangerz.’

The We Can’t Stop hit-maker revealed the title of her upcoming fourth studio album on micro-blogging site Twitter, reported Contactmusic.

“If you don’t know why my record is called BANGERZ you’ll know as soon as you hear it. Nothing but BANGERZ,” she tweeted.

The 20-year-old singer announced last month that she would make a special announcement on Twitter as soon as she reaches 13 million followers and the singer announced the name of her new album once she reached the figure.

“Can’t wait to announce my album title. Miley to 13 million,” she had written.

Lady Gaga leaks lyrics of upcoming single

The singer’s unreleased song is from her much awaited album Artpop

LOS ANGELES, 10 Aug—Even before releasing her new single Applause

from her upcoming album Artpop, pop star Lady Gaga has shared its lyrics for her fans online.

The 27-year-old took to Twitter to share the song’s lyrics, reports acshowbiz.com.

“I stand here waiting for you to bang the gong/ To crash the critic saying: is it right or is it wrong?” Gaga tweeted.

She also reminded her fans to get a taste of the song when it releases on 19 August, tweeting: “8.19”.

The singer has been teasing her fans with hints about the track.

“Give me that thing that I love/ Put your hands up, make ‘em touch,” she had earlier posted on her official website.—PTI

Meryl Streep to star in The Giver

LOS ANGELES, 10 Aug— Oscar-winner Meryl Streep is set to be the new addition to drama The Giver, which is an adaptation of Lois Lowry’s dystopian children’s novel of the same name.

The film is a co-production between The Weinstein Company and Walden Media and is being directed by Phil Noyce, reported Deadline.

Streep, 64, is in talks to play the chief elder, the authoritarian charged with keeping order in a society that seems utopian. They have eliminated pain and strife by converting to Sameness a plan that has also eradicated emotional depth from their lives.

Jonas, a 12-year-old, is selected to be the receiver of memories, who stores all the memories before the sameness. Bridges, 63, plays the lead role of the previous receiver.

Bruce Willis wanted USD 1 million per day for The Expendables 3

LOS ANGELES, 10 Aug—Sylvester Stallone reportedly replaced Bruce Willis from The Expendables 3 because the actor demanded a fee of USD 1 million per day.

Stallone publicly slammed Willis and announced Harrison Ford as his replacement. He also took to Twitter to express his anger against the Die Hard star, tweeting “GREEDY AND LAZY... A SURE FORMULA FOR CAREER FAILURE.”

Willis, 58, was reportedly offered USD 3 million for four days of shooting in Bulgaria but he demanded more, according to the Hollywood Reporter.

“He said he’d drop out unless he got USD 4 million. A million dollars a day. Stallone and everybody else involved said no,” said a source close to the production said.

“I think (Willis) was pretty surprised he was replaced in 72 hours by Harrison Ford — a better actor, a much nicer person and a more interesting direction for the film,” the source added. The next installment of The Expendables is set for release next August.

The action movie has

Bayern Munich dominated over Monchengladbach to win the final 5-1.

Bayern win Bundesliga opener against Monchengladbach

BERLIN, 10 Aug—Treble winner Bayern Munich won the first Bundesliga match under coach Pep Guardiola as Arjen Robben, Mario Mandzukic and David Alaba sealed the 3-1 triumph over courageous Monchengladbach on Friday. The Bavarians started their title defence with a 3-1 win over Monchengladbach at outsold Allianz Arena to kick off the 51st Bundesliga season.

The hosts wasted no time to take over with the starting whistle while Monchengladbach staged a well-positioned defence to focus on counter attacks. Nonetheless, the visitors were unable to avoid an early deficit when Arjen Robben utilized a neat lob into the path by Franck Ribery to slot home from penalty area with 12 minutes into the game. Monchengladbach lost control of things, as Bayern were able to double the lead just three minutes later through Mario Mandzukic, who made use of a rebound from very close range to beat goalkeeper

Marc Andre ter Stegen.

Bayern dominated but yet Monchengladbach were not hapless as Manuel Neuer had to deny Max Kruses shot on target with a reflex. However, minutes later Neuer looked lost when his teammate Dante cleared the ball into his own goal to reduce the lead to 2-1 six minutes before the break. The record champions had chances to restore the lead through Mandzukic and Toni Kroos but ter Stegen saves left the door open for the Foals.

Djokovic, Nadal advance to Montreal semi-final showdown

MONTREAL, 10 Aug—Novak Djokovic and Rafa Nadal advanced to a mouthwatering semi-final showdown at the Rogers Cup after they crushed their quarter-final opponents in ruthless fashion on Friday. Djokovic, the world number one, was flawless in a 6-1, 6-2 demolition of French seventh seed Richard Gasquet while Nadal was equally emphatic in a straight sets win over Australian qualifier Marinko Matosevic.

Serbia's Djokovic and Spaniard Nadal will face off for the 36th time after the 11th seed Milos Raonic and local wildcard Vasek Pospisil compete in an all-Canadian semi-final. Djokovic was imperious against Gasquet as he produced his best performance since returning from a month off after losing the Wimbledon final. Unleashing his full repertoire of big serves, crushing ground strokes and plenty of touch, Djokovic barely raised a sweat as Gasquet was emphatically dispatched in just 52 minutes.

The crowd then got more entertainment when Djokovic returned to the centre court for what has become his customary celebration dance as the stadium roared its approval. "It's a great feeling when you're playing this well and you beat a quality player like Gasquet," Djokovic told reporters. "I'm going to try to memorise what I've done today and how I felt and hopefully take it on the court tomorrow ... same kind of feeling." Nadal was always in control of his quarter-final against a fatigued Matosevic, who had come through two qualifying matches on top of his three main draw victories.

The 12-time grand slam champion never looked like being seriously challenged under the lights and he let rip with a procession of thundering forehand winners on the way to a 6-2, 6-4 victory which booked his place in another Masters series semi-final against Djokovic. "It is always exciting to play against Novak in a great tournament, a Masters 1000," Nadal said in a courtside interview. "It will be a great match and I'll try my best as I always do." —Reuters

World waits for showman Bolt to strut his stuff

Moscow, 10 Aug—Usain Bolt will need to guard against complacency as he begins his bid to win the 100 metres crown while double Olympic champion Mo Farah goes for gold in the 10,000 on the first day of the world championships on Saturday. Track and field, beset again by a spate of positive doping tests to some of the sport's biggest names in the build up to the global showpiece, needs a big performance from its greatest showman.

Jamaican Bolt infamously false-started and was disqualified from the 2011 world final two years ago in Daegu, South Korea, a race won by compatriot and training partner Yohan Blake who is injured and not in Moscow to defend his title. World record holder Bolt's sprint dominance was underlined at last year's Olympics in London when he repeated his Beijing feats of 2008 by winning triple gold, including the 4x100 relay. Bolt will line up in the evening's first round heats with the semi-finals and final on Sunday.

With Blake absent, along with American Tyson Gay, the fastest man in the world this year who has tested positive for a banned substance, Bolt's chief rival will be double 2005 world champion Justin Gatlin. Farah, like Bolt, is a hot favorite to complete a world track double and repeat his Olympic feats when he stormed to 5,000 and 10,000 gold.—Reuters

Brazil-Argentina friendlies scrapped

Brazil's Fernando (C) blocks France's Bafetimbi Gomis (L) from scoring as goalkeeper Julio Cesar looks on during their international friendly soccer match in Porto Alegre on 9 Jun, 2013.

XINHUA

RIO DE JANEIRO, 10 Aug—A planned friendly tournament between Brazil and Argentina later this year has been scrapped, local media reported on Friday. The so-called Superclassic of the Americas, played home and away over two legs, had been tentatively earmarked for 19 September and 3 October.

The decision came after Brazil coach Luiz Felipe Scolari reportedly told Brazil's Football Confederation (CBF) he saw little point in a tournament that did not include foreign-based players.

Brazil has a loaded international calendar in the second half of 2013 with confirmed friendlies against Switzerland, Australia and Portugal. The CBF are soon expected to confirm fixtures for another four FIFA-approved dates in 2013.—Xinhua

Edinburgh Int'l Festival kicks off, Chinese production of Shakespeare captures attention

LONDON, 10 Aug—The Edinburgh International Festival opened Friday evening and a production of Shakespeare by a Chinese theater group grabbed audience's attention.

Susie Burnett, head of communications for the Festival, told Xinhua on Friday afternoon, "The production of Shakespeare's 'Coriolanus' by the Beijing People's Art Theatre has really captured imaginations. We have had to put extra seats on for it."

Burnett said "Coriolanus" was playing at the Edinburgh Playhouse, a 3,000-seat venue. "It has really grabbed peoples' attentions," said Burnett.

She added that many of the Festival's productions opened this weekend.

The start of the festival was marked with the unveiling of a media installation by a Republic of Korea artist outside the main Festival venue in the city center in the early evening.

Korean artist Hyung Su Kim flicked the switch on his installation "Media Skins" outside the Usher Hall, the most prestigious venue at the Festival. Using visuals captured through satellites of a number of places worldwide, Kim has created a kaleidoscopic film.

The film has an original soundtrack based on the traditional Scottish song "The Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond" and the traditional Korean song "Arirang."

He was inspired by Scottish physicist, mathematician, astronomer and inventor David Brewster who invented the kaleidoscope in 1817. Other Festival highlights include several modern dance masterpieces from the LA Dance Project, masterminded by Benjamin Millepied who choreographed and starred in the hit film "Black Swan."—Xinhua

Kvitova stunned, Radwanska, Li, Serena through in Toronto

TORONTO, 10 Aug—Defending champion Petra Kvitova suffered a shock exit when unseeded Romanian Sorana Cirstea beat the Czech 4-6, 7-5, 6-2 on Friday to move in the semi-finals of the Rogers Cup. Cirstea was joined by top seed Serena Williams, who thumped Magdalena Rybarikova 6-1, 6-1 and set up a semi-final clash with third seed Agnieszka Radwanska who overcame her own ineffective serving to beat Italy's Sara Errani 7-6(1), 7-5.

Fourth seed Li Na of China also advanced with a 7-6(1), 6-2 win over Dominika Cibulkova of Slovakia and will meet Cirstea in the last four. After playing respectably in the first set, 2011 Wimbledon champion Kvitova could not keep the ball in the court. She doubled faulted on break points in six different games and ended the game with just 12 winners and 55 unforced errors. Kvitova said that after winning her third round match on Thursday that she could not get to sleep and therefore lacked energy. By the second set, she looked lackadaisical.

"The serve was really bad after this, and I didn't find energy from my legs," she told reporters. "So that's why it looks that bad." The sixth seeded Czech added that fatigue contributed to her 10 double faults overall with the problem with her serve initially physical before it became a mental one. Williams, who has only lost

10 games in three matches this week overpowered Rybarikova with big serves and lethal returns. "I'm definitely feeling pretty good, playing much better than I have in the past month," said Williams.

Radwanska and the fifth seeded Errani embarked on a marathon quarter-final reminiscent of their three-hour clash at the WTA Championships in Istanbul. They played much the same style of match in Toronto, with both steady off the ground and neither able to dictate with their service game with 11 successive breaks of serve in the first set alone. "For both of us the serves is never the key, that's why we are always playing long rallies
