NAY PYI TAW, 26 May— Myanmar is hoping for “win-win cooperation” with international investors as it has completed the Foreign Investment Law-FIL, said Union Minister for Industry U Maung Myint on Monday at Myanmar Manufacturing Summit at the Parkroyal Hotel in Yangon.

In his opening address, the Union minister said the country has already changed its economic policies, encouraging competitiveness in accordance with market economy while the country is moving to the heart of ASEAN economic integration.

A total of 616 companies from 33 countries are currently investing in 12 sectors in Myanmar, according to the Union minister.

Union Minister U Maung Myint also expressed his hope that foreign investors who are participating in the summit would see opportunities for further investment in Myanmar.

Buddhist monastery in Japan launches Myanmar language class

YANGON, 26 May— A Buddhist monastery in the Itabashi Ward of Tokyo, Japan, is conducting Myanmar language classes every weekend for the children of Myanmar migrants, according to a report by Kyodo news.

The report said that around 10 Myanmar children, from preschoolers to junior high school students who have been living all their lives in Japan, are taking part in the class.

The children go to public schools on weekdays and live the lives ordinary Japanese children would as most of their parents migrated to Japan in the 1990s.

Although the civilian government welcomed back exiled Myanmar families, many families are still hesitant in returning to their home after having lived in Japan for nearly 20

Myanmar to host 1st ASEAN-Japan Defense Chiefs Meeting in Nov

By Aung Khin

YANGON, 26 May— The first meeting of defense ministers from Japan and ASEAN member countries is expected to be held in Nay Pyi Taw in November, according to a report by Kyodo News.

Japanese government officials on 22 May announced that the meeting is aimed at boosting security ties between Tokyo and the member countries of the bloc.

Joint development and provision of defense equipment are likely to be discussed at the November meeting, with a peaceful solution to China's maritime disputes with Vietnam and the Philippines in the South China Sea set to be among the major issues of the talks.

The report said Japan aims to strengthen defense cooperation with the ten ASEAN member states when it is experiencing territorial issues with China in the East and South China seas. During the Japan-ASEAN summit in Tokyo last December, Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe suggested holding this meeting.

Senior Japanese defense officials and their counterparts from ASEAN agreed in February to expand cooperation in joint development of equipment to combat terrorism, as well as natural disasters.

Japan has also adopted new principles and guidelines on arm exports, which is the first major overhaul in nearly half a century of its arms embargo policy, in an attempt to play a more active role in global security, the report said.

Vice-minister level officials from Japan and ASEAN countries met in Tokyo in March 2013, together with several participating nations embroiled in territorial disputes with China.

Even before he is crowned, Modi struts the global stage

NEW DELHI, 26 May — Narendra Modi will be sworn in on Monday as India's prime minister at a glittering ceremony that will be as much a show of his determination to be a key player on the global stage as a celebration of his stunning election victory.

For the first time in India's history, a clutch of South Asian leaders will be among the guests watching Modi's inauguration at the presidential palace in New Delhi — including the prime minister of arch-rival Pakistan, Nawaz Sharif.

Modi's Hindu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) and its allies swept India's elections this month, ousting the Nehru-Gandhi dynasty in a seismic political shift that has given his party a mandate for sweeping economic reform.

Even before his inauguration, Modi made waves on the global stage, where once he was treated by many with suspicion — and by some as a pariah — for a rash of Hindu-Muslim violence that erupted 12 years ago in Gujarat, the state he ruled.

Modi, 63, has spoken with the presidents of the United States and Russia, and he has become one of only three people that Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe follows on Twitter. The US administration denied Modi a visa in 2005, but President Barack Obama has now invited him to the White House.

The low-caste son of a tea stall-owner, Modi has given India its first parliamentary majority after 25 years of coalition governments, which means he has ample room to advance reforms that started 23 years ago but have stalled in recent years.

Many supporters see him as India's answer to the neo-liberal former US President Ronald Reagan or British leader Margaret Thatcher. One foreign editor has ventured Modi could be so transformative he turns out to be "India's Deng Xiaoping", the leader who set China on its path of spectacular economic growth.

The BJP has long advocated a tough stance on neighbour Pakistan, with which India has fought three wars since independence from Britain separated them in 1947, and Modi has been seen as a hardliner on issues of national security.

In that respect, Modi's decision to invite Sharif for his inauguration and bilateral talks came as a surprise and raised hopes for a thaw in relations between the nuclear-armed rivals, particularly frosty since 2008 attacks on the city of Mumbai by Pakistan-based militants.

"Modi has already displayed his political dexterity and diplomatic skills in inviting Nawaz Sharif, among other leaders, to his swearing in," wrote columnist Prashant Jha in the Hindustan Times on Monday. "But will he be able to stay the course? What happens after the first terror attack?"

Vikram Sood, former head of India's external intelligence agency, the Research and Analysis Wing, told Reuters that inviting all the leaders of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) was "an astute" diplomatic gesture.

"This augurs well for the region, and an improvement of relations all over the region is possible if these moves are followed by other steps, bilaterally and multi-laterally," he said.—Reuters

Thai protesters test military's resolve

BANGKOK, 26 May — Thailand's military tightened its grip on power on Sunday as it moved to quell growing protests, saying anyone violating its orders would be tried in military court.

It also took its first steps to revitalize a battered economy, saying nearly a million farmers owned money under the previous government's failed rice-subsidy scheme would be paid within a month.

The military overthrew the government on Thursday after months of debilitating and at times violent confrontation between the populist government of Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra and the royalist establishment.

Critics say the coup will not end the conflict between the rival power networks: the Bangkok-based elite dominated by the military and the bureaucracy, and an upstart clique led by Yingluck's brother and former telecommunication mogul Thaksin Shinawatra. The Shinawatras draw much of their influence from the provinces.

The military detained numerous people including Yingluck and many of her ministers, party officials and supporters. Leaders of anti-government protests against Yingluck were also held. The military said anyone detained would be freed in a week and on Sunday it relaxed restrictions on Yingluck, allowing her to go home though she remained under military supervision, a senior military official said.

"She is free to come and go as she pleases but will have to inform us as a sign of mutual respect and we will have soldiers guarding her home," said the officer, who declined to be identified.

The military has thrown out the constitution, censored the media and dismissed the upper house Senate, the last functioning legislature. On Sunday, it said anyone accused of insulting the monarchy or violating its orders would face military court.

BANGKOK, 26 May — Thai Gen Prayuth Chan-ocha on Monday promised to appoint an interim Prime Minister and set up cabinet, but did not give a timeframe.

Prayuth made the remarks at a Press conference held after receiving a royal endorsement as the leader of the National Council for Peace and Order (NCPO) on Monday.

He sidestepped the question as whether he would become the Prime Minister himself, telling the reporter who asked the question to wait and see, reported the Nation online newspaper. The NCPO also chief declined to say when the next election would be held, saying it depends on the situation.

Addressing the Press conference, Prayuth called for public understanding over the coup, affirming sincere action aimed at easing unrest, adding that the NCPO will do the best to solve the problems. Prayuth also emphasized the "full power" to rule, saying curfew will continue but with leniency while stressing focus on keeping peace.

The NCPO chief also called on media not to amplify conflicts.

"I'm not here to fight but fix. But I will do anything (in order to fix)," he said. "Excuse me any extra-tough measure. They are necessary."

"The less you allow me to speak, the more I'll be able to work. Please be calm and patient, like you have always been.—Xinhua army spokesman Winthai Suvaree said in a televised statement. Despite the warnings, a small crowd of protesters, some holding handwritten signs such as "Get out Dictators", formed outside a Bangkok shopping centre and grew through the day.

Hundreds of soldiers, most with riot shields, lined up to contain the crowd and there was some shouting and pushing and at least two people were detained, a Reuters reporter said.

By late afternoon about 1,000 people had gathered at the Victory Monument, a central city hub, confronting soldiers at times but there were no clashes.

In his first public comments since the coup, Thaksin said on Twitter he was saddened and he called on the army to treat everyone fairly. Thaksin was ousted as prime minister in a 2006 coup and has lived in self-exile since a 2008 graft conviction.

IMF's Lagarde calls for closer cooperation among central banks

SINTRA (Portugal) 26 May — Christine Lagarde, managing director of the International Monetary Fund, called on Sunday for closer cooperation among the world's central banks to cope with the challenges of increasingly interlinked and complex financial systems.

Speaking at a dinner in Sintra, Portugal, to kick off the first annual ECB Forum conference, Lagarde said the potential gains from cooperation could be huge in times of distress as seen during the financial crisis.

"If policies are viewed only from a national perspective, we may end up in a world of ad hoc intervention, less rebalancing, and the potential to export financial instability," she said in the text of her speech. "This would be a world of possibly large welfare losses in many countries, with not just spillover effects — from advanced to emerging market economies, but also 'spillbacks' — feedback effects from emerging market to large advanced economies."

The financial crisis has shown that coordinated international action helped prevent disruption spreading to economies around the globe, she said. And these upsides should not be forgotten as the crisis subsides. "We need a concerted effort to examine the effectiveness of cooperative policy responses, their spillover effects, and their global welfare implications — also in light of the evolution of the financial system," Lagarde said.

She also said advanced economies could help reduce volatility by communicating clearly the course of their monetary policy.

N Korea's nuclear envoy says met with ex-US officials in Mongolia

BEIJING, 26 May — A senior North Korean diplomat in charge of nuclear issues said on Monday he had informal talks with former US government officials in Mongolia.

Ri Yong Ho, North Korea's chief negotiator to the long-stalled aid-for-disarmament talks, told Kyodo News that he met with former US State Department official Joel Wit and others who used to be responsible for issues related to Pyongyang in Washington during his stay in Mongolia from last week.

Ri Yong Ho, North Korea's chief negotiator for the long-stalled six-party talks, is pictured upon his arrival at Beijing international airport from the Mongolian capital of Ulan Bator on 26 May, 2014.

Ri confirmed the contact at Beijing's international airport upon his arrival from the Mongolian capital of Ulan Bator.

Ri, who unexpectedly arrived in Beijing last Tuesday from Pyongyang on his way to Ulan Bator, is most likely to have discussed with them how best to resume the six-party talks, chaired by China and involving Japan, South Korea, Russia and the United States, North Korea, which has called for the resumption of the talks that have been deadlocked since 2008 without preconditions, threatened in March to conduct a new-form nuclear test.

Top CIA officer in Afghanistan mistakenly named by White House

WASHINGTON, 26 May — The White House inadvertently included the name of the top CIA official in Afghanistan on a list of participants in a military briefing with President Barack Obama that was distributed to reporters on Sunday, the Washington Post reported.

The newspaper said the official, identified as "Chief of Station" in Kabul, was named as being among those at a briefing with Obama during the president's trip to Bagram Air Base near the Afghan capital.

The list of names was sent by email to reporters travelling with Obama on his surprise Afghanistan visit and included in a "pool report" shared with correspondents and others not on the trip.

The Post said the White House issued a revised list deleting the CIA official's name after it recognized the mistake.

The newspaper said its White House bureau chief, Scott Wilson, who was on the trip, copied the original list from the email provided by White House Press officials and included it in a report sent to a distribution list with over 6,000 recipients.

After he spotted the reference to the station chief, Wilson asked White House Press officials in Afghanistan if they had intended to include that name, the Post said.

"Initially, the Press office raised no objection, apparently because military officials had provided the list to distribute to news organizations," the Post added.

"But senior White House officials realized the mistake and scrambled to issue an updated list without the CIA officer's name."

The newspaper said it withheld the individual's name at the request of the Obama administration, which warned he and his family could be at risk if his name were circulated.

A review of the pool reports from the trip shows that the name was taken out of an updated list sent to reporters.

Reuters is also withholding the name from this article.

The Post said it was not clear if the CIA would now be forced to remove the officer from Afghanistan.

The White House declined to comment.

Regulator OKs construction of underground ice wall at crippled plant

TOKYO, 26 May — Japan's nuclear regulator said Monday it will allow Tokyo Electric Power Co. to begin the construction of an underground ice wall at the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear complex in June as planned, after dispelling a number of safety concerns.

The frozen wall, to be set up around the buildings housing the Nos. 1 to 4 reactors hit by the 2011 nuclear accident, is seen as a key measure to address the radioactive water buildup at the complex. The project is funded by the government.

The Nuclear Regulation Authority has been wary about the impact of ground sinking that may occur by implementing the project, but it accepted TEPCO's explanation on the same day that tilting of the ground supporting the reactor buildings will not be significant enough to undermine safety.

"We do not think there is a problem in regard to the stability of the ground," a TEPCO official told NRA members and experts.

After hearing the explanation, NRA Commissioner Toyoshi Fuketa said, "I think we have been able to confirm today the scale of ground sinking, which is what we have most feared as side effects of building the wall." But he noted that there are still issues to be discussed concerning the project, such as how to accurately measure the level of radioactive water accumulating inside the reactor buildings.

Obama, in Afghanistan, hopeful on security pact

BAGRAM AIR BASE, (Afghanistan), 26 May — President Barack Obama made a surprise trip to Afghanistan on Sunday to visit US forces who are wrapping up a 13-year mission and signaled that he intends to keep a small number of troops in the country for training and counter-terrorism operations. Cheers erupted among the hundreds of US troops gathered in a Bagram hangar when Obama said that at the end of this year, “America’s war in Afghanistan will come to a responsible end.”

With Afghanistan immersed in a runoff election to choose a successor to President Hamid Karzai, Obama did not meet Afghan government officials nor travel to the capital Kabul. Karzai has long been out of favor with Washington over his refusal to sign a bilateral security agreement to allow US troops to stay beyond 2014.

Obama’s fourth visit to Afghanistan came as he faces criticism at home over a foreign policy often derided as too passive in dealing with crises from Syria to Ukraine and Russia. He is to respond to those criticisms in a speech on Wednesday at the US Military Academy at West Point.

Karzai’s refusal to sign the bilateral security agreement has exacerbated concerns about the country’s prospects for stability as the Taliban insurgency rages on, and has contributed to a steep economic downturn in recent months.

Obama administration officials briefed on the matter told Reuters last month that the number of US troops in Afghanistan may drop well below 10,000 beyond 2014, the minimum demanded by the US military to train Afghan forces.

The decision to consider a small force, possibly less than 5,000 US troops, reflects a belief among White House officials that Afghan security forces have evolved into a robust enough force to contain a still-potent Taliban-led insurgency, the officials said.

There are now about 33,000 US troops in Afghanistan, down from 100,000 in 2011, when troop numbers peaked a decade into a conflict originally intended to deny al-Qaeda sanctuary in Afghanistan after the 11 Sept, 2001, attacks.

The two leading candidates in Afghanistan’s presidential race, Abdullah Abdullah and Ashraf Ghani, have both pledged to sign the security agreement as soon as possible, should they be elected in the second round of voting scheduled for 14 June.

The new president may not start work until August, as logistical constraints and widespread fraud could mean it will take the country’s electoral commission weeks to determine the outcome of the vote.

Obama called Karzai from his plane after leaving Bagram, saying he wanted to conclude a bilateral security agreement with the next president. He also told Karzai he would inform him of his decision on post-2014 troop levels before making it public, a senior administration official told reporters on the plane.

China busts 23 ‘terror, religious extremism’ groups

BEIJING, 26 May — Chinese police in the far western region of Xinjiang have taken down 23 “terror and religious extremism groups” and caught more than 200 suspects in May, state media said, days after the region’s deadliest attack in years. China has announced year-long “anti-terrorism” operations in restive Xinjiang, home to a large Muslim Uighur minority, as well as nationwide, following a series of bloody incidents that Beijing blames on Islamists and separatists from the region.

Police busted the groups in the southern Xinjiang prefectures of Hotan, Kashgar and Aksu and seized more than 200 explosive devices in raids, the official Xinhua news agency said late on Sunday. Many of those captured were in their 20s and 30s, and had learned how to make explosives by watching online videos, Xinhua said.

“They exchanged their experiences of making explosives and propagating jihad through chatting tools, text messages and illegal preaching sites,” the news agency said, citing the regional public security department.—Xinhua

Shopping mall fire kills five in latest South Korean accident

SEOUL, 26 May — A fire at a bus terminal and shopping complex in a busy suburban neighbourhood north of Seoul killed five people and injured dozens on Monday, the latest in a series of accidents in South Korea, including a ferry disaster that killed more than 300.

The blaze broke out in the morning in the terminal complex that houses large shopping malls and a movie theatre.

Fire officials said the fire started in the food court area where renovation was being carried out and a welding torch was likely responsible. Most of victims suffered from smoke inhalation, they said.

South Korea, Asia’s fourth-largest economy and a leading manufacturing powerhouse, has developed into one of the world’s most vibrant and technically advanced democracies, but faces criticism that regulatory controls and safety standards have not kept pace.

The country is mourning more than 300 people who drowned when a heavily overloaded ferry capsized and sank on 16 April, the country’s worst maritime disaster in 20 years.

Many of the dead were students and teachers from the same school.

There have since been two subway accidents that left nearly 200 people injured.

President Park Geun-hye and her government have faced sharp criticism of the way they handled the ferry disaster. Park has promised to overhaul safety oversight and has broke up the country’s coast guard to streamline maritime search and rescue operations.—Reuters

Ukrainians back Poroshenko to find way out of crisis

KIEV, 26 May — Petro Poroshenko, a billionaire chocolate manufacturer, claimed the Ukrainian presidency with an emphatic election victory on Sunday, taking on a fraught mission to quell pro-Russian rebels and steer his fragile nation closer to the West.

A veteran survivor of Ukraine’s feuding political class who threw his weight and money behind the revolt that brought down his Moscow-backed predecessor three months ago, the burly 48-year-old won 55-percent in exit polls on a first round ballot marred by millions unable to vote in troubled eastern regions.

Results will not be announced until Monday, but runner-up Yulia Tymoshenko, on 13 percent, made clear she would concede, sparing the country a tense three weeks until a runoff round.

Poroshenko, known as the “Chocolate King”, has no time to lose to make good on pledges to end “war” with separatists in the Russian-speaking east, negotiate a stable new relationship with Moscow and rescue an economy sapped by months of chaos and 23 years of post-Soviet mismanagement and chronic corruption.

The size of his victory reflects in part Ukrainians rallying behind the front-runner in the hope of ending a political vacuum that Russian President Vladimir Putin has exploited to annex the Crimea peninsula and offer solidarity, and maybe more, to rebels in the east who want to break with Kiev and accept Russian rule.

“He has taken a heavy burden on his shoulders,” said Larisa, a schoolteacher who was among crowds watching the results on Independence Square, where pro-Western “EuroMaidan” protests ended in bloodshed in February that prompted President Viktor Yanukovich to flee to Russia. “I just want all of this to be over. I think that’s what everybody wants.”

In the eastern Donbass coalfield, where militants ensured polling stations were closed to some 10 percent of the national electorate, rebels scoffed at the “fascist junta” and announced a plan to “cleanse” their “people’s republic” of “enemy troops”. A minister in Kiev said in turn its forces would renew their “anti-terrorist operation” after a truce during the polling.

Libyan premier wins congress backing after ex-general's threats

Libyan Security forces vehicles patrol to secure the area where Libya's parliament members are meeting, at the Crown Prince's Palace in Tripoli on 25 May, 2014.—REUTERS

TRIPOLI, 26 May — Libya's new Prime Minister Ahmed Maiteeq won a vote of confidence from parliament on Sunday in defiance of a renegade former army general who has challenged the assembly's legitimacy.

Maiteeq, backed by the Muslim Brotherhood, was initially elected two weeks ago after a chaotic parliamentary session that some lawmakers had rejected as illegal.

Libya's legislature is at the center of a growing standoff between rogue former general, Khalifa Haftar, with a loose alliance of anti-Islamist militias, and pro-Islamist factions positioning for influence in the North African country.

The Europe Union's special envoy on Sunday called the crisis Libya's worst since the 2011 war ousted Muammar Gaddafi, with the fragile government struggling to control brigades of former rebels and militias who are now key powerbrokers.

Lawmakers met on Sunday under heavy security to vote to approve Maiteeq's government, a week after militia forces claiming loyalty to Haftar attacked the congress to demand lawmakers hand over power.

"The congress has granted Prime Minister Ahmed Maiteeq its confidence. Out of 95 members, 83 voted in favour of his government," Abdulhamid Ismail Yarbu, an independent lawmaker told Reuters.

Another lawmaker confirmed the votes for Maiteeq, a businessman who will be Libya's third premier since March after months of unrest in the OPEC oil producer.

There was no immediate response from a spokesman to Haftar, a former Gaddafi ally who broke with the Libyan autocrat in the 1980s, sought exile in the United States and returned to help fight in the 2011 war to end his one-man rule.

Three years after a NATO-backed revolt toppled Gaddafi, Libya still has no national army, no new constitution and its parliament is caught up in infighting that has delayed the country's transition to full democracy.

Powerful rival brigades of former rebel fighters, still heavily armed with anti-aircraft cannons and armored vehicles, often make demands on the weak state. Each is loosely allied with competing Islamist and anti-Islamist political forces squaring off for control.

In March, the parliament ousted one premier, and his successor also asked to step down after his family was attacked by gunmen.

Polls open in Egyptian presidential election

CAIRO, 26 May — Egyptians began voting on Monday in a two-day presidential election which former army chief Abdel Fattah al-Sisi is expected to win, reviving rule by strongman three years after the downfall of Hosni Mubarak.

Polling stations opened at 9.00 am (0600 GMT) across the country. Sisi, widely seen as Egypt's de facto leader since he deposed the Muslim Brotherhood's Mohamed Mursi last July, faces only one challenger: the leftist politician Hamdeen Sabahi.

Homemade bomb explodes outside polling station in Egypt: state TV

CAIRO, 26 May — A homemade bomb exploded outside a polling station in the Egyptian city of El-Mahalla El-Kubra on Monday, state TV reported, on the first day of voting in presidential elections.

Egypt has faced a surge in violence after the army ousted the country's first democratically elected president Mohamed Mursi in July following mass protests against his rule and announced a roadmap that would see presidential and parliamentary elections this year.

There were no immediate reports of casualties.

30 killed in train accident in N India

NEW DELHI, 26 May — At least 30 people were killed and over 50 injured in a collision of passenger train and goods train in the northern Indian state of Uttar Pradesh on Monday, said local media reports.

The Gorakhdham Express on Monday ramped into a stationary goods train at Sant Kabir Nagar, 230 km from the state capital Lucknow, according to the reports.

The district administration, involved in the rescue and relief operation, confirmed death of 30 people and that casualties could rise as many people are still trapped inside at least three coaches which derailed.

TV footages showed rescuers were trying to take wounded people out the derailed coaches.

Yemen says security forces kill senior al-Qaeda leader

SANAA, 26 May — Yemen's security forces on Sunday killed a senior al-Qaeda leader wanted for attacks on local and foreign targets in Sanaa, the Yemeni government said, after a raid near the capital in which at least four other militants died.

The government said in a statement that two officers also died when anti-terrorism units raided an al-Qaeda hideout and a car bomb-making facility in Bayt al-Adhari and Bani Hakam districts, in the Arhab region, and fought a gunbattle with its occupants. Two officers were also wounded.

Security forces also conducted two other separate raids in downtown Sanaa, the statement said, but gave no details.

The raids were part of an escalating campaign against militants responsible for a wave of attacks across the country.

"The forces exchanged fire with the wanted men who were holed up inside a house," a government official, who asked to remain anonymous, told Reuters. "Five were killed and four were captured."

The government statement, received by email, said one of the dead militants was Saleh al-Tais, who it said was involved in the January killing of Ahmad Sharafeddin, a delegate at national reconciliation talks representing the Shi'ite Muslim Houthi group and a former dean of the law faculty at Sanaa University.

One of 25 people listed by the Interior Ministry's most wanted list, Tais was the operational commander of al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) in Sanaa who had a 5 million riyal ($25,000) bounty for his capture, the statement said.

Tais, who had evaded capture more than once in the past, was involved in a number of major attacks, including an attack on the Yemeni Defence Ministry compound in Sanaa last December and the assault on the Central prison last February, it said.

"Tais was also linked to a number of terrorist operations that targeted national and foreign interests, particularly the cold-blooded assassination campaign targeting security personnel in the Yemeni capital," it said.

Explosives, car bombs and heavy weapons were found during the raid.

President Abd-Rabbu Mansour Hadi said last month that Yemen was at war with al-Qaeda, as the militants have stepped up attacks on government facilities after being driven out of strongholds in southern Shabwa and Abyan provinces.

Overcoming contradictions for a better future

By Aung Khin

Economic and democratic transitions are underway in many Southeast Asian countries. The transition processes are also now facing some contradictions in these nations. Overcoming contradictions through the balance of power among the governments, parliaments, military and social classes are one of the crucial issues to achieve a stable political system.

The countries which are in a transitional phase need a more equitable power balance system for a stable development. If the power balance does not benefit economic transition and environment for reform, the administrations will be weak and more susceptible to internal or external groups of different interests, thus further leaving their authorities and powers paralyzed.

How to persuade one group of people to give a chance to others and to give up a certain portion of their privileges and benefits, in the concept of reform, is a very critical issue.

Practically, this is easier said than done. It will have some losses and pains for some social classes. In fact, a successful distribution structure depends on the stable development of the strength of all levels of society, in particular, that of the poor at the bottom of the social ladder.

If the low income class has to suffer a long-term loss, the transition process will not gain success, threatening the development of the countries as well as the property of upper level people. Under these circumstances, the respective governments, policy makers and upper level officials should take serious consideration on securing the lives of the working class, and help develop them into middle class.

Power balance plays a key role in the emergence of a middle income class. Any form of favouritism is an obstacle to the stability of economies and their political systems. If countries could overcome contradictions in power balance, economic and reform process, they will achieve a basic state of stable development, and then move into the rank of developed nations.

Good Feeling

Kyí Mun

When do you have a good feeling?

How do you know that you have a good feeling when you have one?

Where do you think you have a good feeling?

In your mind, in your heart, in your guts or in your head?

"I've the blues, because I've no shoes;
Until I saw in the street,
A man with no feet."

Just A Matter of Mental Attitude

The blues we have is surely a bad feeling, but you see that you can easily cure your bad feeling when you change your mental attitude, or rather when the mental attitude is changed by the circumstances.

Half-Empty or Half-Full?

When you are offered a glass of water which just fills exactly half the glass, how would you feel? Would you feel that the glass is half-empty or would you feel that the glass is half-full? It actually depends on the state of your mood. The objective fact is that you are being offered half a glass of water, neither half-empty nor half-full. That negative or positive view first depends on your view, and your good feeling or bad feeling depends upon that view of yours. It is as simple as that.

The Real Leader

In the open seas, when the winds were very rough,

The Pessimist cursed the wind, and

The Optimist prayed for the wind to calm down, but

The Leader adjusted the sails!

-Maxwell Taylor?

In that case, the pessimist had the bad feeling and the optimist had the good feeling, but the Leader had a great feeling.

The Nature of A Mirror

It is said that the Mirror has always a great feeling. Why? Because The Mirror has always a clear and clean NATURE. It's nature is PURITY itself. It has neither a cloudy feeling of DISLIKE nor a fanciful passion of LIKE.

The Mirror refuses NOTHING and it accepts ALL, but it KEEPS NOTHING. So, the Mirror is never disturbed or perturbed. It remains UNSWAYED. The Mirror is ever SOUND, SOLID and SERENE.

The Mirror and the Window

By the way, Management Gurus used to say that when you meet with success, you should look outside through the open WINDOW, and that when you are confronted with failure, you should LOOK INTO the MIRROR. But, in actual life, most of the managers used to get themselves a good feeling by blaming others through the open window when there is a failure, and look into the mirror when there is a success, having lots of good feeling for themselves.

Good Feeling is Natural

Mind is like a Mirror. The original nature of mind is clean, clear and pure; only when likes and dislikes are harbored in the mind, the original purity of mind is disturbed and defiled. So, it is imperative that all kinds of mental defilements be dispelled from the mind in order for a good feeling to have a chance to appear in the clear mind. Original Mind is just like a Blue Sea without any WAVE or Mind (Original Mind) is similar to a Blue Sky devoid of any CLOUD. Only the Wave or the Cloud are the Catalysts of the disturbances.

Gold is Not Afraid of Fire

So, to be able to enjoy a Good Feeling, the Mind must be CLEAR of all sorts of defilements or disturbances or pollutions, just like PURE GOLD. It is said that "Gold is Not Afraid of Fire". So also, an original, pure mind is not afraid of Bad Feeling, because its NATURE is PURITY itself. Pure Mind, like Pure Gold, is not afraid of FIRE - The TRIALS and TRIBULATIONS OF LIFE!

Donors supply water to locals in Kyaukpadaung Tsp

KYAUKPADAUNG, 26 May—Some villages in Kyaukpadaung Township of Mandalay Region are facing shortage of water in the summer. Therefore, donors provided water to the local people.

On 24 May, a water bowser distributed potable water to the local people in Yochar Village for the fifth time.

“Donor is U Bo Kyaw and wife Daw Than Yu Swe of Kyaukpadaung. They bought a water bowser to donate water to the water shortage villages when they need water in the summer annually. On average, each time of water donation costs K20,000,” said U Aye Lwin, driver of the water bowser.

Yochar village is formed with over 80 houses. All the people are engaged in production of baskets made of bamboo.

“Last five years, a tube-well was sunk near the monastery of the village. But, the water pumped out from the tube-well could not be used for consumption. In think it is necessary to improve the lakes nearby the village for public consumption,” said a local.

Business aviation picks up, but jet surplus persists

SEATTLE, 26 May—Business aircraft are taking to the skies again as many economies around the world improve, but a surplus of jets delivered just before the recession means the equivalent of 2,750 jets remain parked in hangars.

An excess of jets is depressing prices for planes, particularly older ones, and clouding the outlook for manufacturers of new jets, such as Bombardier Inc, Gulfstream and Cessna.

Some companies are cutting back on corporate jet travel and reducing executives' use of corporate jets for personal trips.

With so many jets not being flown, businesses are finding it more difficult to justify new purchases, said Rolland Vincent, president of Rolland Vincent Associates, a jet consulting firm that works with Utica, New York-based JetNet.

"It's like having a lot of cars in your driveway," Vincent said. "If you don't use them that much, you're not going to be out shopping for another one."

The recovery in business flying is uneven around the world, and prone to setbacks. A global survey of private aircraft, including helicopters and charters, showed a 2 percent decline in the hours flown in the first quarter, from a year ago.

Flight hours in Asia, Europe and the Middle East rose in the past year through March, but declined in the United States and Latin America, according to the survey by Jet Support Services Inc (JSSI), a Chicago-based company that supplies service and support for aircraft.

The harsh US winter played a big role in depressing demand for flying, while political issues in Eastern Europe and slower economic growth in Asia affected flying in those regions, JSSI said.

Prawns replace abalone as China property developers go down-market

HONG KONG, 26 May—The Chinese developer behind an eight-storey clubhouse with a billion-dollar view over Shanghai's Huangpu River is turning to lower-end coffee shops and restaurants to fill the space, as a broad anti-graft campaign puts the brakes on conspicuous spending.

The state-of-the-art, steel and glass building was originally designed as a playground for China's elite, including space to mix and mingle with officials from state-owned enterprises based in offices nearby.

"Last year, we originally planned to open a clubhouse in the building, but it became too sensitive," said Vincent Zuo, a manager of research and development at Franshion Properties (0817.HK), which has a market value of $2.7 billion.

"We are now looking to open restaurants and coffee shops," said Zuo, adding that an art museum was another option for the arch-shaped building which sits in the middle of the company's 30 billion yuan ($4.8 billion) cruise terminal complex.

The decision to target middle-market consumers comes amid a crackdown on official corruption and extravagance in China that is forcing some high-end developers and hotel operators to change tactics to adapt to the new environment.

Franshion, a unit of state-owned Sinochem Corp which also operates the five-star Grand Hyatt Shanghai, has shifted its hotel focus more towards private events from government and business dinners. The number of wedding banquets is up 50 percent from last year, said Andy Ding, vice president of Franshion's unit China Jin Mao Group.

At the same time, consumption per head among business clients has dropped by about 30 to 40 percent since the crackdown began in 2012. Where once the average spending was around 1,000 yuan per person, now it is 600 to 700, Grand Hyatt Shanghai's manager Grace Tsou said.

As customers cut back, hotels are reviewing their menus. That means expensive and extravagant dishes such as abalone and lobster are out and cheaper offerings such as tiger prawns are in, said Tsou.—Reuters

Asian shares hit one-year high on Wall St rally, Ukraine vote

TOKYO, 26 May—Asian shares hit one-year high on Monday thanks to a strong session on Wall Street and a decisive win for billionaire Petro Poroshenko in Ukraine's presidential election.

MSCI's broadest index of Asia-Pacific shares outside Japan. MIAPJ0000PUS rose 0.15 percent while Japan's Nikkei share average. N225 gained 0.7 percent to hit one-month high.

Investors took their cue from upbeat US housing data on Friday, with sales of new single-family homes rising more than expected in April and the number of houses on the market hitting a 3-1/2 year-high.

The figures were good enough to boost Wall Street shares after Federal Reserve chief Janet Yellen said earlier this month that a slumping housing market, as well as geopolitical tensions, risked undermining the US economy.—Reuters

Quality issues push e-cigarette production to US from China

SHENZHEN, 26 May—Some of the leading US producers of electronic cigarettes are moving their manufacturing to the United States from China in response to growing concern about quality and the prospect of tighter federal regulations.

In recent weeks, some of the best-selling US e-cigarette companies, including closely held Mystic and require, among other things, manufacturers that want access to the US market to register with the agency and list the ingredients in their products.

"As a general rule, the FDA regulation will require more control over the manufacturing process," said Bryan Haynes, an attorney at Troutman Sanders, a law firm in Richmond, Virginia, that represents e-cigarette

White Cloud, announced that they would move production to new, highly automated US factories that would enable them to track ingredients and quality more closely. As a fringe benefit, they even expect costs to be lower than in China, the country that invented the battery-powered cartridges that produce a nicotine-laced inhalable vapor.

"People are concerned about quality," said Bonnie Herzog, a senior analyst at Wells Fargo Securities, who expects more manufacturing to shift to the United States.

"There is varying quality among all these different brands," she said. "I think regulation will standardize these products because they will be forced to improve."

The shift has gained momentum since April, when the US Food and Drug Administration proposed rules that would companies. He said more companies plan to move production to the United States because it "could make compliance easier".

Many of these companies already produce the nicotine-laced liquid used in e-cigarettes in the United States and then ship it to China, where the battery-powered devices are assembled. Most batteries will continue to be made in China.

E-cigarettes are considered a crucial business for the three major US tobacco companies, which have bought or developed their own brands in recent years to offset shrinking sales of conventional tobacco cigarettes. Compliance with new US regulations has become a top priority.

US sales of e-cigarettes are expected to outpace sales of tobacco cigarettes by 2020, in part because of the perception they are safer to smoke.—Reuters

EU agency recommends against Novartis heart failure drug

Sony, Shanghai Oriental Pearl to set up China PlayStation JVs

BEIJING, 26 May—Japan's Sony Corp and China's Shanghai Oriental Pearl Group Co Ltd will set up two joint ventures to make and market Sony's PlayStation games console in China, Shanghai Oriental Pearl said in a stock exchange filing on Monday.

One joint venture will be responsible for the console's hardware, while the other will be focused on software, the company said in the filing to the Shanghai Stock Exchange.

The joint ventures, which will be in Shanghai's free trade zone, will be set up by a subsidiary of Shanghai Oriental Pearl and by Sony's China arm. But China is likely to be a difficult market for games consoles, which were banned from 2000 until last January. Piracy and smuggling of consoles is rife, and the Chinese gaming market is very different to traditional console markets like Japan, Europe and the US as Chinese gamers predominantly play PC and mobile games.

Chinese games developers and publishers have also adopted a "free to play" model where games are free and they make money by selling in-game upgrades like extra lives and special weapons. Games consoles traditionally make their money from the sale of the console and games themselves.

Sony and Shanghai Oriental Pearl are setting up the joint ventures in response to the suspension of the ban on game consoles within Shanghai's free trade zone, a Sony Computer Entertainment Inc spokesman told Reuters.

Nothing has been decided regarding the development of operations, and details will be announced later, the spokesman said.

Sony Computer Entertainment Inc is the Sony unit responsible for the PlayStation.

One of the joint ventures will have registered capital of 10 million yuan ($1.60 million) and will be 51 percent owned by Shanghai Oriental Pearl Culture Development Co and 49 percent owned by Sony (China), Shanghai Oriental Pearl said in the filing.

The other will have registered capital of 43.8 million yuan and will be 30 percent owned by Shanghai Oriental Pearl Culture Development Co and 70 percent owned by Sony (China). Sony's move comes one month after Microsoft Corp and its joint-venture partner BesTV New Media Co Ltd announced they would launch Microsoft's flagship Xbox One games console in China in September.

Russia develops manned space programme to replace

SAINT PETERSBURG, 26 May—Russia is developing a national programme of manned space explorations which will replace the International Space Station (ISS) programme after 2020, the Russian Federal Space Agency, Roscosmos, said on Thursday.

"The development of the national strategy of manned spaceflight is underway now. Along with the Russian Academy of Sciences and the industrial sector we are preparing a certain concept beyond the ISS," Roscosmos Deputy Chief Sergei Savelyev told reporters at the 18th St Petersburg International Economic Forum. China and the European Space Agency, he added, were seen as the potential partners in the new strategy, but the key role will belong to Russia.

Russian Deputy Prime Minister Dmitry Rogozin, who is in charge of space and defence sectors, said earlier in the week that Moscow had no plans to extend the operation of the ISS beyond 2020, though the United States had proposed to extend ISS cooperation after that year.

RRsat sees video distribution market shifting to outsourcing

ELLA VALLEY, 26 May—New technologies in digital media services and an industry shift towards outsourcing will bring strong growth opportunities in the coming years, said Avi Cohen, chief executive of Israel's RRsat Global Communications Network.

Video distribution is a $9.4 billion market, Cohen said, and broadcasters and studios are increasingly handing the work over to external service providers, like RRsat. Currently about 30 percent is outsourced, but he sees that number growing. "Every junction—a change in technology, a need for investment—is a great reason for them to decide to move it out and stop doing things themselves," he said. "We are getting requests from all of the big companies, allowing us to broaden our services, and this is a global trend." RRsat, which distributes 630 channels worldwide and handles all distribution of the National Football League outside the United States, reported record revenue of $32.9 million for the first quarter, up 12.3 percent from 2013. Net income excluding one-time items was $2.2 million, up from $1.9 million.

According to Cohen, the company's main competitors in the global market—UK-based Arqiva, Orange subsidiary Globecast and US-based Encompass—are all larger, but have been less conservative in growing and are highly leveraged.

TAIPEI, 26 May—Hon Hai Precision, a major supplier of Apple Inc, is set to raise about T$93 billion ($310 million) via selling new shares to foreign investors for its expansion overseas and into Taiwan's developing 4G telecom market, a local paper reported on Monday.

Hon Hai is planning to ask shareholders at its AGM in June for approval of the share sale, with the company planning to sell up to 1 billion new shares via global deposit receipts (GDR), the Economic Daily News said.

Hon Hai shares closed at T$93 on Friday.

Big wins for French far right, Britain's UKIP rock EU elections

BRUSSELS, 26 May — Eurosceptic nationalists scored stunning victories in European Parliament elections in France and Britain on Sunday as critics of the European Union more than doubled their seats in a continent-wide protest vote against austerity and unemployment.

French Prime Minister Manuel Valls called the breakthrough by Marine Le Pen's anti-immigration, anti-euro National Front in one of the EU's founding nations a political "earthquake".

Anti-establishment parties of the far right and hard left, their scores amplified by a low turnout, made gains in many countries although in Germany, the EU's biggest member state with the largest number of seats, and Italy, the pro-European center ground held firm.

In a vote that raised more doubts about Britain's long-term future in the EU, Nigel Farage's UK Independence Party, which advocates immediate withdrawal, led the opposition Labour party and Prime Minister David Cameron's Conservatives comfortably with almost half the results declared.

A jubilant Le Pen, whose party beat President Francois Hollande's ruling Socialists into third place, told supporters: "The people have spoken loud and clear ... they no longer want to be led by those outside our borders, by EU commissioners and technocrats who are unelected."

"They want to be protected from globalization and take back the reins of their destiny."

With 80 percent of votes counted, the National Front had won 26 percent of the vote, comfortably ahead of the conservative opposition UMP on 20.6 percent, with the Socialists on 13.8, their second heavy defeat in two months after losing dozens of town halls in March.

First official results from around the 28-nation bloc showed the pro-European center-left and center-right parties will keep control of around 70 percent of the 751-seat EU legislature, but the number of Eurosceptic members will more than double.

The center-right European People's Party, led by former Luxembourg Prime Minister Jean-Claude Juncker, was set to win 212 seats, preliminary results issued by the parliament showed.

"As the EPP has a strong lead ... I am ready to accept the mandate of the European Commission president," Juncker told reporters in parliament. "We will have a clear pro-European majority in this house." The center-left Socialists, led by outgoing European Parliament President Martin Schulz of Germany, were in second place with 186 seats followed by the centrist liberals on 70 and the Greens on 55. Eurosceptic groups were expected to win about 141 seats, according to a Reuters estimate, the far left 43 and conservatives 44.

A glum looking Schulz would not concede defeat, telling reporters he would negotiate with other parties.

"It is a bad day for the European Union when a party with such a racist, xenophobic and anti-Semitic programme gets 24-25 percent of the vote in France," he said. "But these voters aren't extremists, they have lost trust, they have lost hope."—Reuters

Mali says 50 soldiers killed in Kidal fighting

BAMAKO, 26 May — Fifty Malian soldiers died this week during a failed army attempt to seize the Tuareg separatist northern town of Kidal, the West African country's defence minister said on Sunday.

The fresh fighting on Wednesday, the worst since the government and separatist groups signed a preliminary peace agreement last year, threatened to sink struggling peace talks to end a long cycle of Tuareg uprisings.

"In terms of toll, we have recorded 50 deaths unfortunately," Soumeylou Boubeye Maiga said on Malian state television, adding that 40 others were wounded in the failed operation. Maiga had previously said that 20 soldiers were killed in the combat and 30 were wounded.— Reuters

Mexican rebel leader Marcos retires, says 'no longer exists'

MEXICO CITY, 26 May — Subcommandante Marcos, who led an indigenous uprising in southern Mexico and became one of Latin America's most iconic revolutionaries, on Sunday said he was stepping down as spokesman for the Zapatista rebels and would disappear. The ski-masked, pipe-smoking guerrilla leader became an idol of the anti-globalization movement after he led the 1994 Zapatista rebellion in the southern state of Chiapas, but he had avoided public appearances in recent years.

"We have decided that today Marcos no longer exists," he wrote in a lengthy statement published on the Zapatista website that he said was his last message as the rebel leader.

Marcos denied rumors he had become ill, saying he was making way for a new generation to take over speaking for the rebels, who still hold a handful of communities deep in Chiapas.

Named for Mexican revolutionary hero Emiliano Zapata, the Zapatista National Liberation Army launched a 12-day battle with the Mexican Army that claimed at least 140 lives, rising up on the day Mexico opened its borders to free trade.

Marcos became a hero to leftist activists and intellectuals by championing the rights of Maya Indians who had been oppressed for centuries, but he was seen as a self-serving publicist to his critics on the right.

Marcos has not made any major appearance since 2006, when he traveled across Mexico to condemn the country's political class during a presidential election campaign. He banned media from a 20th anniversary celebration this year.

Wives of jailed opposition mayors win Venezuela ballots

CARACAS, 26 May — The wives of two opposition mayors jailed over protests against Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro won landslide victories in elections on Sunday for their spouses' vacant posts.

Though the women's victories were widely expected in cities that are hotbeds of opposition to Maduro, they still brought some cheer to a movement divided over the strategy of protests and smarting from repeated defeats in national elections.

Patricia Ceballos, whose husband Daniel Ceballos was sacked in March and received a 12-month sentence for failing to remove protester barricades in the streets of San Cristobal, took the mayorship there with 74 percent of votes.

Suspected Islamists kill 20 in Nigeria market attack

MAIDUGURI, 26 May — Suspected Islamist gunmen opened fire on a market in a Nigerian village on Sunday, killing 20 people in the latest violence against civilians in the northeast of Africa's top oil producer.

The assailants surrounded the village of Kamuyya, a military source based in the nearest town told Reuters. The militants shot people as they gathered to trade in its open air market. Villages in Borno state, the epicentre of Boko Haram's violent campaign to carve an Islamic caliphate out of religiously mixed Nigeria, have been under almost daily attack.

On Thursday, suspected Boko Haram gunmen rampaged through three villages in northern Nigeria, killing 28 people and burning houses to the ground.

Boko Haram made world headlines when it claimed the abduction of more than 200 school girls from the village of Chibok last month, prompting international outrage and persuading President Goodluck Jonathan to accept foreign help to try to free them, including a team of around 80 US troops deployed to neighbouring Chad, and surveillance drones.

Since the girls were snatched on 14 April, at least 470 civilians have been killed by the insurgents in various attacks, according to a Reuters count.

A spate of bombings across north and central Nigeria has killed hundreds, including two in the capital Abuja and one in the central city of Jos on Tuesday that killed 118 people.

Rosa Scarano, whose husband Vicencio Scarano also lost his job and received a 10-month jail sentence in March for the same offence in central San Diego city, won an even larger 88 percent of votes to take the vacant mayorship there.

UK finance ministry warns on Scottish independence costs

LONDON, 26 May— Britain's finance ministry stepped up its attack on the Scottish government's independence plans on Monday, saying it had not fully budgeted for setting up a new administration that could cost Scottish taxpayers over 1.5 billion pounds

($2.5 billion). People in Scotland vote on September 18 on whether to end a 307-year union with England and split from the rest of the United Kingdom. Britain's finance ministry has repeatedly argued that Scots would be financially worse off after independence.

On Monday, it said

setting up the new public bodies such as a Scottish tax authority, financial regulator and benefits system would cost each Scottish household a minimum of 600 pounds, and potentially much more.

"The Scottish government is trying to leave the UK, but it won't tell anyone how much the set-up surcharge is for an independent Scotland," deputy finance minister Danny Alexander said. He is due to present a more detailed breakdown of the Westminster government's estimates of the costs of Scottish independence and Scotland's budget deficit on Wednesday.

The Scottish government dismissed the report as "deeply flawed".

The British finance ministry said new institutions would cost Scotland at least 1 percent of its annual economic output — or 1.5 billion pounds — based on estimates made when the Canadian province of Quebec voted on independence. The actual cost could be far higher.

New Zealand, which has a similarly sized population and economy to Scotland, was currently spending 750 million pounds on a new tax system alone, while a new Scottish benefits system would cost 400 million pounds, the finance ministry said. A bill of 2.7 billion pounds was possible if the Scottish government pressed ahead with plans for 180 new public bodies, the finance ministry said, based on a cost of 15 million pounds for each new policy department.

Sofia Vergara Splits From Fiance Nick Loeb

LOS ANGELES, 26 May — Actress Sofia Vergara has called off her relationship with businessman Nick Loeb. The duo was unable to decide how to spend time together, she disclosed via a social networking medium.

She shared a screenshot of a note on her Who Say account on 23 May.

“Not that anyone should care, but in order to not give the press the chance to invent crazy and hurtful drama, I prefer to tell my fans personally that Nick and I have (decided) to be apart,” Vergara said in the note.

“We have (been) having too many problems with figuring out how to spend time together and (because) of my work and now his,

its been getting worse and worse, not fun anymore,” she added.

They will continue to be good friends.

“We are still very close but we (believe this) is the best thing for us right now,” added the 41-year-old.

In February, the actress was still deciding on plans for her dream wedding with Loeb, saying she was unsure about the exact details.

Akshay Kumar: Sonakshi Sinha should have won a National Award for Lootera

MUMBAI, 26 May — If actress Sonakshi Sinha felt that her 2013 release Lootera deserved to win awards, actor-producer Akshay Kumar seconds that.

The action star liked her performance in the period drama so much that he said it should have been appreciated with a National Award for it.

Akshay, who has acted with the 26-year-old in movies like Rowdy Rathore and Once Upon Ay Time In Mumbai Dobara!, says she was brilliant in Lootera.

“It is a pleasure working with Sonakshi. She is wonderful and talented. The last movie of her I saw was Lootera. I think she was brilliant. She should’ve got a National Award (for it). It’s something wonderful that I saw,” Akshay, who will now be seen with her in the forthcoming film Holiday, told IANS.

LOS ANGELES / NEW YORK, 26 May — The “X-Men” mutant superheroes smashed into US and Canadian theatres and collected $90.7 million (53.8 million pounds) in ticket sales through Sunday, keeping monster hit “Godzilla” at bay and heading toward a decisive win over a long holiday weekend.

“X-Men: Days of Future Past” was expected to bring in $110 million by the end of the US Memorial Day holiday on Monday, distributor 20th Century Fox said. The movie has already earned a global total of $261.8 million after opening at No. 1 in all 119 countries around the world.

Last week’s winner, monster movie remake “Godzilla”, dropped to second place with $31.4 million through Sunday, according to estimates from box office tracking firm Rentrak. Its sales were projected to reach $39 million by Monday.

Romantic comedy “Blended” claimed the No 3 spot, taking in $14.2 million and on pace for about $17 million through Monday.

“X-Men: Days of Future Past” is the seventh movie in the blockbuster Marvel Comics franchise about mutant superheroes.

In the latest instalment, Hugh Jackman’s sharp-clawed Wolverine travels back in time to try and save the mutants from future destruction. To alter history, he is drawn into battle with the blue, shape-shifting Mystique, portrayed by Jennifer Lawrence in the $200 million film.

The movie scored the fifth-biggest Memorial Day weekend opening in history, Rentrak said. —Reuters

Slasher attacks Japan pop girl group AKB48 at fan event

Tokyo, 26 May — A man wielding a saw slashed and injured two members of Japanese female pop group AKB48, rated by Guinness as the world's biggest such group, at a fan event in Japan, leaving the country stunned at the extremely rare violent crime.

The group, known for its perky routines, was shaking hands with fans at a meet-and-greet function on Sunday, when the man attacked them with a weapon described variously as a 50-cm (20-inch)-long saw or a hatchet, Japanese media said.

"This sort of thing is unimaginable," one fan told Japanese television. "I'm in shock."

Group members Rina Kawaei, 19, and Anna Iriyama, 18, received emergency surgery for cut and broken fingers, with Iriyama also suffering cuts to the face, media said.

"The surgery ended successfully and their condition is stable," their manager said. "They should be able to leave hospital tomorrow."

A male staff member received cuts to his hand.

24-year-old high school dropout for attempted murder after the event, in the northeastern city of Takizawa, was interrupted by screams of "Stop!" and "No!" There were no bag checks, and fans have said most of the group's events have only cursory checks at best, prompting newspapers to call for tighter security. The incident featured on several newspaper front pages and television shows. Security checks tend to be light in Japan, which has stiff gun control laws, and violent crime involving weapons is rare.

AKB48, founded in 2005, is known for its high "kawaii," or cuteness, quotient, and all its members are in their teens or early 20s. Fans vote each year to determine 64 of the most popular girls from a 237-member pool, who then rotate in and out of four main troupes and several affiliated groups, based on their popularity.

The "AKB" in the group's name is a reference to Akihabara, Tokyo's high-tech mecca, where it has a theater. They are also popular overseas, with a sister group based in Jakarta. Every year fans elect the most popular members of the group, obtaining a ballot by buying the group's latest CD. Some hard-core fans buy hundreds to give their favourite a boost.

Mexico captures drug gang leader blamed for wave of violence

Gulf Cartel (CDG) drug kingpin Juan Manuel Rodriguez Garcia is being escorted by police during a presentation at the Attorney's General Office hangar in Mexico City on 25 May, 2014. —REUTERS

MEXICO CITY, 26 May — Mexican authorities said on Sunday they had captured one of the top leaders of the Gulf drug cartel who was responsible for a recent wave of shoot outs and massacres in the northern state of Tamaulipas.

Juan Rodriguez Garcia was arrested in a wealthy suburb of the northern industrial city Monterrey, National Security Commissioner Monte Alejandro Rubido told a news conference in Mexico City.

Rubido said Rodriguez's struggle to gain control of the Gulf cartel was behind a wave of violence that has hit Tamaulipas this year. Mexican security forces caught Mario Ramirez Trevino, the leader of the cocaine-trafficking Gulf cartel, in August last year, setting off a battle for control of the gang.

"The command of Rodriguez Garcia was not recognized by all the criminal factions of the group," Rubido said, adding that Garcia was one of the government's most wanted criminals in the region.

The Gulf cartel has also been battling the Zetas gang over control of drug and migrant smuggling routes in Tamaulipas state, home to the biggest border crossing for trade between the United States and Mexico.

Sixteen bodies had been found earlier this month at two different sites in the port town of Tampico in Tamaulipas.

Russia crowned world champions again

Russia's players celebrate with the trophy after winning their men's ice hockey World Championship final game against Finland at Minsk Arena in Minsk on 25 May, 2014.—REUTERS

MINSK, 26 May — Russia claimed their fourth world ice hockey championship in seven years with a 5-2 win over Finland in the final in Minsk on Sunday to partly make up for their Sochi Olympic disappointment.

Finland dumped Russia out of the Games in February at the quarter-final stage and just as in the Olympics, the Finns found themselves a goal down early on when Sergei Shirokov gave Russia the lead on 10 minutes on the powerplay.

Roared on by a partisan crowd who were firmly behind the Russians, it took time for the Finns, who had only scrapped into the knockout stages, to find their form.

They tied up the game with only three seconds remaining in the first period through Iiro Pakarinen and six minutes into the second period Erkki Westerlund's side took the lead through Olli Palola.

Russia's reply was instant, however, with Alexander Ovechkin tying up the game at 2-2 less than a minute later.

Russia were desperately looking for the all-important go-ahead goal and they had a great opportunity with a powerplay late in the second period, Evgeni Malkin sending a fine wrist shot past Pekka Rinne's stick side to put his side 3-2 in front.

Danis Zaripov helped ease home nerves with an excellently taken goal after good interplay with Shirokov to give Russia a two-goal lead with his 13th point of the competition.

With five minutes to go, the tournament's leading scorer Viktor Tikhonov added his eighth goal and 16th point overall with a strike on the powerplay as Russia cruised to victory.

Belarusian president Alexander Lukashenko and Russian president Vladimir Putin both attended the final.

Sweden, the world champions, gained some consolation as they picked up the bronze medal after beating the Czech Republic 3-0.

It was Jaromir Jagr's last game for the Czechs but the 42-year-old did not end his international career on a high note as Joakim Lindstrom opened the scoring after four minutes from Simon Hjalmarsson.

Sweden wrapped up the victory midway through the third period, Erik Gustafsson orchestrating a lightning counter-attack and feeding Mikael Backlund who sent a wrist shot high into the net.—Reuters

Rosberg wins in Monaco to end Hamilton's run

MONACO, 26 May — Germany's Nico Rosberg won the showcase Monaco Grand Prix for the second year in a row on Sunday to snatch back the Formula One world championship lead from Mercedes team mate Lewis Hamilton.

Rosberg's second victory of the year, from a controversial pole position that had ratcheted up the tension between the two title rivals, took his points tally after six of 19 races to 122 with Hamilton on 118.

Hamilton, who complained 13 laps from the end that he had something in his eye and could not see properly, was second as dominant Mercedes chalked up a sixth win in a row and fifth successive one-two finish.

"It's a special win, definitely," Rosberg told reporters of a fifth career victory that ended his team mate's run of four in a row and came on the streets he has known since boyhood.

"Lewis has had the momentum with the results and everything and I really needed to try to break that momentum...I managed to do that this weekend."

Australian Daniel Ricciardo took third after chasing Hamilton nose-to-tail to the finish while quadruple world champion team mate Sebastian Vettel, in his 100th race for Red Bull, retired after eight laps with a turbo problem.

After coping with two safety car interludes,

Rosberg took the chequered flag 9.2 seconds ahead of Hamilton after the two had spent the first half of the race barely a second apart.

Hamilton, who had simmered on Saturday when he suggested Rosberg might have deliberately brought out yellow warning flags in qualifying to slow the Briton and deny him pole, had a comparatively low-key afternoon.

Federer celebrates Mother's Day with victory in Paris

PARIS, 26 May — Roger Federer spent as little time as possible on court on the opening day of the French Open on Sunday, beating Lukas Lacko 6-2, 6-4, 6-2 before returning to his parental duties on Mother's Day in Paris. Serena Williams, the No 1 seed and overwhelming favourite to retain the women's title, needed time to find her rhythm against France's Alize Lim before winning 6-2, 6-1. The American's older sister, Venus, also reached the second round in straight sets.

Watched by his wife Mirka and his twin girls, Federer moved gently through the gears against the shaggy-haired Slovakian under grey skies on the Philippe Chatrier show court. The former champion, who has returned to something close to his best form after a disappointing 2013, admitted a trace of fear before the year's second grand slam.

"I wasn't nervous going into the match," said Federer, 32. "It's more just like those hints of fear, maybe yesterday, maybe this morning at one point, just for like five seconds 'Oh, I really hope I don't have to pack my bags today', that kind of feeling."

Roger Federer of Switzerland

But he had little to fear from Lacko and by mid-afternoon he was once again in a position to help Mirka look after their newly-born twin boys. "Everything is great," Federer said.

Serena, who warmed up for the match against her training partner wearing a blazer suit, committed 23 unforced errors in the first set. She allowed the local favourite two break points in the fifth game but the American always had too much power.—Reuters

Montgomery breaks American drought with Senior PGA win

CARY, (NC), 26 May — Colin Montgomery broke his long American drought in style when he won the Senior PGA Championship by four strokes in Michigan on Sunday.

Montgomery, who never won on the PGA Tour despite a decorated career in Europe, fended off a mid-round charge from Tom Watson to clinch the second major of the season on the over-50s Champions Tour.

The Scot carded 65 to finish at 13-under-par 271 and evergreen American Watson made four birdies in five holes from the turn to shoot 65 and claim second place.

"It's been a long time," Montgomery told NBC TV. "I haven't won a 72-hole event in America until today. It's a very special moment for myself and my caddie. We've been trying, my god we've been trying."

"We've come close on a number of occasions. It's great to come here as a senior and finally break that duck."

Montgomery, who turned 50 last year, has won 31 times on the European Tour, where he topped the order of merit a record eight times, including seven seasons in a row.

But his only previous victory in the United States was at the 1998 World Championship Match Play event, which at the time was unofficial.

Montgomery teed off with a one-stroke lead on Sunday and effectively clinched the title with six birdies in eight holes, starting at the eighth.

Any lingering doubts about the outcome disappeared when his second shot into the par-four 18th sailed long and left of the green, only to strike the grandstand and ricochet back onto the putting surface.
